A Delegation of Veterans Call on General Harrison.

Republican Leaders Arranging Plans of the Campaign.

Head of the American Party in Colorado for Harrison.

Freshet in the Monongahela Does Great Damage.

Money Loss Estimated as High as Two Millions.

Pilgrims at Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 12.—This was a busy day with General Harrison. About 10 o'clock he came to the New Denison house, where he remained during the greater part of the day, receiving delegations in the parlors. The time previous to the arrival of the delegations was spent in conversation with friends at the Republican head quarters. Just before 12 o'clock the first delegation arrived. It was a committee from Lodge No. 199, Grand Army of the Republic, from North Manchester, Wabash county, Indiana. They came to invite General Harrison to attend a reunion of soldiers to be held at that place August 22 and 23. At their head was Shelby Sexton, senior vice commander of the G. A. R. for Indiana during the war of the rebellion. The address of Dr. Sexton was short and to the point. General Harrison in response said:

COMRADES AND GENTLEMEN: Your request is one that appeals to me very strongly, and if it were single I should very promptly accede to it, but without being rude, I hope you will clearly understand that invitations of a kindred character are coming to me every day, presented by individual committees and committees, but more frequently by written communication. I have felt that if I opened a door in this direction it would be a very wide one, and I would rather subject myself to the criticism of having favored particular localities or particular organizations to the neglect of the others having equal claims upon me. I am therefore compelled to say to you that it will be impossible for me to accept your invitation, but in doing this I want to thank you for the interest you have shown in my presence with you, and for the spirit of comradeship which brings you here.

Work of the Campaign.

NEW YORK, July 12.—At a conference of the republican national committee with presidents of republican state leagues and their committees tonight, the following was adopted:

Resolved, That the national republican committee recommends to each of the state central committees of the several states that they recognize state league organizations of republican clubs, and give them such aid and support as may be within their power.

Secretary Hum[illegible]ey of the league said tonight the national committee had requested that as far as possible all public meetings throughout the country should be held under direction of the leagues and local clubs. This would not conflict with the work of national and state committees, which generally have charge of national and state speakers and their appointments. Humphrey said the national league had a special campaign committee who are to have charge of a special campaign to be undertaken by league clubs as follows: General W. E. Dodge of Indiana to be chairman, Jas. C. Foster and A. B. Campbell president and secretary of the national league, A. Mott of New Jersey and W. W. Johnson of Mary and.

General Nathan Goff of West Virginia and Edward M. Cimerson of Pennsylvania, chairman and secretary of the congressional committee, conferred with the executive committee today regarding work in congressional districts.

Americans for Harrison.

DENVER, July 12.—The following letter was issued tonight which will explain itself:

DENVER, July 12, 1888.

To the Executive Committee of the Central Committee of the American Party of Colorado.

GENTLEMEN—I have been requested by members of the American party of Colorado, to issue my call for the assemblage of a convention, at which delegates may be chosen to attend the national convention of the American party to be held at Washington, D. C., the fourteenth of August, 1888, for the purpose of nominating candidates for president and vice president of the United States. With full comprehension of the importance attaching to the political actions of American citizens at this particular time; and after mature deliberation upon the subject, am constrained to decline to issue such call. In justice to you and to myself, it is proper that I should briefly state the reasons which lead to this determination. Were the political organization of the American party sufficiently developed over our country to warrant the existence of even a "mere fighting" chance, I should and would be found within its ranks a willing soldier ready to battle in its cause. Inasmuch, however, as the American party organization has not yet been perfected in many of the states of our union, and as it is conceded by the best informed among us that there is not any possible chance this year of electing to the high offices to which they may be nominated, the national candidates of the American party, I should be false to my pledges to the interests of true Americanism, were I to give aid and encouragement to a movement which can only result in bestowing an empty honor at the expense of withdrawing several thousand votes from the ranks of the great army now mustering in defence of every principle dear to the American citizenhood. The enunciation of principles made by the two great political parties in their late platforms have defined the issues of the present contest in unmistakable terms. On the one hand a party pledges itself to the adoption of free trade, unrestricted immigration and as their logical train of concomitant evils reducing American labor from its present high and independent position to the low level of the European pauper wage-worker. On the other hand a great party stands pledged to the maintenance of protection of American industries, to the prosecution of national legislation, checking the present unrestricted flow of convict and pauper immigration, thereby sustaining the American citizen in the enjoyment of the blessings of his citizenship and securing to his children the full value of their birthright unimpaired by the piratical encroachments of imported communism and anarchy. In view of these facts, I cannot, as an American, do anything that would weaken the power for the good of that great party whose platform of principles is so emphatically American. I shall therefore, in common with the large majority of the American party with whom I have conversed, devote my energies and give my undivided support and labor to assist the election to the office of president of the United States, that genuine representative of true American principles, Benjamin Harrison of Indiana. I expect that a few of my party colleagues will at first rush in to criticise my action but knowing the uniform good judgment possessed by the individual members of the American party, am confident that they will soon be with me in doing service for the rights of true American citizenship. I tender herewith my resignation as chairman of the central committee of the American party.

Very respectfully,

[illegible] M. CLARKE,

Chairman Executive Committee, American party.

Great Floods in Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURG, July 12.—The freshet in the Monongahela river is almost unprecedented and great damage has been done to river craft and property along the river from the headwaters down to this city.

The suddenness of the rise took river men entirely unawares, and they were not prepared when the great volume of water burst upon them. Millions of feet of lumber, scores of coal craft, fences, outhouses and coal tipples have been floating down the swift current for the last eighteen hours. The river at this point is still rising, with twenty-one feet nine inches on the marks at 9 o'clock, but it is reported as stationary, with forty-five feet at Greensboro, a number of miles above this city.

At every point between Greensboro and Pittsburg the towns are under water and the residents have been compelled to live in the upper stories of their houses, and in some cases to seek the hills for safety. Many had not time to remove their goods, as the water rose at the rate of a foot an hour, and at Greensboro, 32 feet rise was reported in less than 2 hours.

The damage to property cannot be estimated at present, but will reach away up into the hundreds of thousands. So far but one life has been reported lost.

The scene along river front this morning was one of great excitement. The banks were lined with people, watching the debris as it was swept down the swift current. River and coal men were on the alert, fearing that their craft would be torn from their moorings, and as fast as one cable would snap in twain it would be replaced by another. Occasionally a floating boat, barge or timber would strike one of the piers of the bridge and sink from view; again the helpless craft would pass the bridges in safety and continue on its journey to Cincinnati. The greatest damage to river craft occurred between 4:30 o'clock this morning and daylight. Shortly before 2 o'clock a large number of barges came down the river and struck the bridge, the large barges turning end over end, and breasting the tow boat Barnard in against the steamer Jacobs.

PITTSBURG, July 12.—To-day the waters that have been sweeping the valley of the Monongahela and the valleys of its tributaries for the last sixty hours are again falling into their natural channels. They leave in their track scenes of desolation and ruin that never had their counterpart in the same localities. From Pittsburg to the mountain fastnesses of Randolph county, W. Va., towns have been ravaged, manufactories inundated, boats sunk, houses and lumber floated off, fields with their wheat in shocks and growing crops devastated, families driven to the hills for shelter, and in many instances the accumulations of years of toil and self-denial have been lost in an hour. The losses entailed by the flood will not, it is ascertained to-day, be short of $8,000,000, a large proportion of which falls with crushing effect upon the people of the thriving counties of Monongalia, Marion, Taylor, Harrison, Lewis, Barbour, Upshur and Randolph in West Virginia. In Pennsylvania the losses are in the counties of Allegheny, Washington, Westmoreland, Fayette and Greene, the heaviest being in Allegheny, Washington and Fayette. These losses fall most heavily upon the owners of coal property, railroad companies and farmers. Notwithstanding the suddenness of the coming of the water and the area of destruction, the losses of flats, barges and small river craft have been comparatively small, and nearly all boat owners are congratulating themselves on their good fortune. In Pittsburg proper much of the loss has fallen upon the owners of shanty boats and boat houses, but these are for the most part insignificant. The owners of mill property will lose largely, and have to undergo no end of inconvenience on account of the invasion of the mills by the water, putting out fires, and rusting and almost ruining the valuable machinery. Little lumber or other movable property has been carried away from this city, but from points above millions of feet of valuable timber and lumber have come down and been carried off into the Ohio, a total loss to the owners.

There was no rain in any part of the flooded district yesterday, and by this evening the traces of the flood will have been generally removed. At ten o'clock there was 17 feet of water in the river and falling. The drift had almost passed out and the river had lost its turbulence. Coal men were preparing their fleet for shipment, and by to-morrow all crafts will have departed for western and southern ports. The shipment will aggregate ten million.

Suicide of an Artist.

TRINIDAD, July 12.—The Daily Citizen this evening says: Some days ago a good looking young man calling himself Fred. Remington, and professing for an artist on Harper's Weekly, came to this city and spent sometime sketching the mountain scenery in its vicinity. He mingled with those of our citizens who were recently residents of New York, and there is no reason at this writing for doubting that the man gave his genuine name and true relation to that journal. To-day he took morphine with suicidal intent, and left a will bequeathing to Miss Waite, a fair miner of this city, some four thousand dollars, and setting apart $500 for the expenses of his own funeral, $2000 to the Journalists' home and $1000 to the Greeley colony in his father's army. Also he wrote a letter to his father, a banker, asking him to grant Miss Waite a position in his bank, as she was capable and worthy. Just what transpired, if anything, between him and the fair lady is not at this hour known. Rumor has it, of course, that she went back on him. As we go to press at 5 p. m. a physician and a number of assistants are by means of artificial respiration and hypodermic injections of alcohol prolonging the young man's hours with extreme difficulty. He is in a comatose condition that is considered hopeless.

LATER.—Mr. Remington died at 5:0 p. m. As he had seen a lot of play in Wo it has been suggested that he might have taken an overdose of morphine without suicidal intent.

Moore Separated from Mrs. Norton.

TOPEKA, Kas., July 2.—About noon a warrant was served on Mrs. Norton by Constable Davies, charging her with violating the laws of Kansas in relation to marriage by living with a man not her husband. She was then separated from Moore and assigned to another room. A warrant was issued against Moore as well as Mrs. Norton, but the former being already in the custody of officers, it was not served on him. It is thought Mrs. Norton will plead guilty to the charge and receive the maximum penalty, a fine of $500.

TOPEKA, Kas., July 2.—Mrs. Norton in conversation with a correspondent soon after the warrant was served said: It is the work of Norton. I am satisfied he has instigated this prosecution. They want to get at the money we have so we will be unable to resist their persecution. Moore became much enraged at this new turn of affairs. Late last night Mrs. Norton made a proposition to Judge Baughin that she would leave Moore altogether if they would release him and not prosecute him, but Baughin refused to listen to the proposition. The terrible strain was beginning to tell upon her, and she was almost prostrated. She had a good night's rest, however, and this morning she was feeling very cheerful. Judge Baughin had another brief interview with her again this morning and again urged her to leave Moore, but she would not listen to him, and abruptly turned away from him while he was talking with her.

Judge Baughin said afterwards: "I had some hopes last night that we would persuade her to leave Moore. I believe she had almost made up her mind to do so, but this morning she has her dander up and will listen to nothing. I have about come to the conclusion that we can accomplish nothing in that direction. She may as well make up her mind, however, that Moore will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law, and will no doubt spend a good term in the penitentiary." Moore's attorneys however have announced their determination to make a fight against taking Moore back. The governor's warrant directing the arrest of Moore in obedience to the requisition of the governor of Missouri is now in the hands of the sheriff. Moore's attorneys declare the requisition papers will not hold good, and that on the hearing of the habeas corpus proceedings tomorrow the prisoner will be released.

Depew in Europe.

QUEENSTOWN, July 12.—Chauncey Depew, who is a passenger on the steamer Britannic, was seen by a reporter on the arrival of that vessel at Queenstown today. Depew is in robust health. He said he would make a tour of Europe during the next two months.

A One-Sided Election.

WINNIPEG, July 12.—The provincial elections yesterday resulted in a signal victory for the government. The entire province has been swept from end to end. Out of thirty-eight seats thirty have been heard from, twenty-seven of which are for the government and three for the opposition.

THE FRENCH FLOOD.

Boulanger Resigns His Seat in the Chamber of Deputies.

His Proposition to Revise the Constitution Rejected.

Floquet Scores Him—The Chamber Censures Him.

He Proposes to Wipe Out the Stain With Blood.

A French Sensation.

PARIS, July 12.—In the chamber of deputies to-day Boulanger proposed dissolution of the chamber. His proposition was rejected. He thereupon resigned his seat.

General Boulanger in his speech proposing dissolution said such a course was imperative, and that elections ought to be held before the celebration of the centennial of the revolution of 1789. The country demanded the institution of new safeguards to secure the republic from the attacks of its adversaries against which it was powerless. The chamber of deputies was falling into ruin and decay and the country was tremblingly. Monarchists were waiting the republic, expectant of its death agony. The country felt that its safety demanded revision of the constitution. He did not doubt that the patriotism of the deputies was on a level with their sense of duty. He would do his duty by demanding the passage of a resolution that the chambers, being convinced of the necessity for new elections, ask President Carnot for dissolution.

Premier Floquet reproached General Boulanger for support from the right. A voice from the left: He said it was not for a man like General Boulanger who was always absent from the chamber to judge of its legislative labors or criticize hard working members. What has General Boulanger made appeal to the country for. Floquet indirectly: The country answered you in the Charente election. We have never recognized you as one of us. We will celebrate the centenary by again proclaiming supremacy of civil power. We represent universal suffrage. We have rendered more service to the republic than you can do harm. You demand dissolution. It is in your party that it exists. Your photographs come from Germany where your interest lies. Cheers from the left and uproar among members of the right.

General Boulanger said: M. Floquet's speech is only the utterance of a party educated school teacher. He in no way answers to the general policy of revision. He merely makes personal attacks. I tell him now as I told him amid the noise, that he impudently lies."

After a scene of excitement the president of the chambers said before applying censure he would allow General Boulanger to speak. General Boulanger asked censure was to be applied to Floquet or himself.

The president—It was you that first attacked the chambers. The last words you uttered make it necessary to apply a severe rule.

General Boulanger protested against a regime which did not respect liberty of the tribune. He said, in view of the president's decision, he would resign his seat. The general thereupon left the chamber, followed by his partisans. Members of the left still claimed that censure should be applied to General Boulanger. The president remarked that Boulanger, by leaving the chamber, did himself justice.

M. de Lamasette, member of the right, reproached the president for showing partiality toward Floquet. This led to a renewal of the uproar. When order had been restored a vote of censure of General Boulanger was adopted. The chamber then adjourned until Monday.

PARIS, July 12.—It is reported that in consequence of occurrences in the chamber of deputies Boulanger and Floquet will fight a duel. Clemenceau and Perin are said to have consented to serve as seconds for Floquet and Count Dillon and M. de Guerrere for Boulanger.

A Newspaper Sensation.

LONDON, July 12.—The Pall Mall Gazette publishes some sensational correspondence from Berlin, under date of July 10, which is in effect as follows: Freiderichskron palace, at Potsdam, where Dowager Empress Victoria is living, is in all but name a prison, and the ex-empress is virtually under arrest. In any case she is receiving scant consideration from the men now in power. The presumed object is to bring influence to bear upon her majesty which will induce her to surrender her husband's papers.

LONDON, July 12.—It is semi-officially stated that the Berlin correspondence regarding the treatment of ex-Empress Victoria which the Pall Mall Gazette published today is entirely without foundation.

Through a Trestle.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., July 12.—A terrible accident occurred on the Virginia Midland railroad early this morning. The through southern train that left here at 11:25 last night went through a trestle between Orange Court House and Barboursville, a distance of fifteen feet, killing five persons outright and wounding twenty-five. The trestle was known to be weak, and the railroad company was engaged in filling it in. The train was moving at a speed of six miles in crossing the trestle, under regulation orders. The engine had passed safely over most of the trestle, when the smoker, mail, baggage and express cars went down with a crash, dragging down the engine and tender and two passenger coaches. The engine went down bottom foremost, thus communicating no fire to the wreck. All lights were extinguished on the fall. Among the killed are O. C. Cox, of Alexandria, of the engineering department of the Piedmont Air Line; J. C. Whittington, postal clerk; E. S. Brightwell, postal clerk. The badly injured include W. D. Parrott, W. T. West and W. L. Wallace, postal clerks; Potter Field, express agent; S. E. Jennings, of Lynchburg, and Captain T. C. Taylor, passengers.

Parnell's Attitude.

LONDON, July 10.—Parnell by his attitude in the house of commons, giving notice that he should insist upon a resolution creating a special committee to inquire into the charges made against him by Attorney General Webster and the Times, has satisfied all his critics in the liberal party. He can hope to satisfy the tories, who insist that he must go to the courts for satisfaction. Parnell's offer to have the committee made up of English and Scotch members is similar to the one offered by him at the last session, when the Times printed the first "forged" letter. The government then refused his proffer, and will undoubtedly again refuse to accept it when the resolution shall come up next Thursday.

This refusal, in order to be understood, must be compared with the effect of such action in the congress of the United States. There no member whose honor has been assailed by newspaper charges has ever been refused a personal investigation, where the offended member prefers such a request. It is no answer to say that Parnell has a remedy in the English courts. English prejudice rules there. The Times has already spent from 15,000 pounds to 20,000 pounds in making the case. It would take at least a similar amount and much time to contest a case in the courts, where, in the present condition of the English courts, no satisfaction could be secured. If the government thought it had a case against Parnell that would satisfy the honorable members it would have availed upon the opportunity to have a special parliamentary enquiry. The government's refusal to go to the only possible fair tribunal has completely offset the impression created by the action of the Times.

Parnell's Belief.

LONDON, July 10.—In an interview Parnell says he believes the home rule movement will result in the establishment of an imperial parliament, in which England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales and the colonies will be represented. Each country would have a separate legislature to manage its local affairs. The imperial parliament, he thought, would supplant the house of lords. Parnell does not believe the next election will result in the return to the house of commons of a majority of less than 120 Gladstonians.

A Bride's Discovery.

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—The Globe-Democrat prints the following special from Kansas City: John Egan, who was employed in St. Louis as collector for the Post-Dispatch, left here a week ago short in his accounts, it is alleged, about a hundred dollars, and came to Kansas City. Egan was accompanied by his wife, whom he married in St. Louis in March. Egan made arrangements to go to work out his plans were foiled yesterday by the arrival of D. A. Marshall, of the Post-Dispatch. Marshall intended to have Egan arrested, but finally decided not to do so. Mrs. Egan first learned last night that her husband was accused of crookedness and a quarrel was the result. This morning she searched his trunk and found letters showing that he had a wife living in San Francisco. She then charged him with it, and he did not deny it. He soon left the house and it was learned he boarded a train for the west. During the forenoon Mrs. Egan swore out a warrant for the arrest of Egan on a charge of bigamy. The warrant was turned over to the chief of police and telegrams were sent out to intercept him.

Shooting at Hugo.

DENVER, July 12.—Bill Foster, foreman for the S. C. V. Hardy cattle company, rode into Hugo to-day. After filling up with whiskey he undertook to run the village, forcing bar-tenders to "set 'em up" at the point of the revolver, and making quiet citizens dance to the tune of his six-shooter. After the thing had been carried on several hours the officers conducted to put a stop to it. After an exchange of shots between Foster and the officers, Foster was found laid out with a bullet in one of his eyes. It is thought he will recover. None of the officers were hit, but the balls from Foster's revolver flew very thick and close to their heads for a few seconds.

Fiftieth Congress.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—A resolution to print extra copies of the report of the committee on pensions in the case of seven vetoed pension bills was the text for some political discussion. Cockrell, desiring to have the first of the pension vetoes (the Doherty case) printed among the others, Hawley intimating that publication of the veto would not help the president or his party with surviving soldiers of the republic. The discussion was participated in by Stewart, Davis, Butler, Hoar and Blair, becoming quite personal and bitter between the two latter gentlemen.

Without disposing of the subject the senate proceeded to consideration of the fisheries treaty, and was addressed by George in favor of its ratification. He said the matter of rejection of the treaty had already been settled by republican senators in caucus, and his speech delivered was not for the purpose of setting what ought to be done but to justify what had been decided on. By arraignment before the American people of the president for negligence or indifference to American rights, by rejection of the treaty, it was hoped enough voters would be secured into support of the republican ticket to reverse the action of the American people in 1884 and to return coveted power to those who had been elected that year. George defended the provisions of the treaty at some length. At the conclusion of George's speech a bill to pay $50,000 to Mrs. Larimer of Wyoming, for important services in giving information concerning the hostile purpose of the Sioux Indians, was passed.

The senate then adjourned.

HOUSE.

House sessions were ordered for next Wednesday and Thursday nights for the consideration of bills reported respectively from the committee on labor and the committee on military affairs.

Ford of Michigan, from the committee on military affairs, reported back a resolution for the appointment of a special committee to investigate alleged evasions of the contract labor law. In reply to a question by Vandever, of California, Ford stated that the resolution was broad enough in its scope to cover the subject of any evasion of the law against Chinese immigration.

Cox, of New York, called the attention of the house to the great necessity of this resolution to correct abuses now existing. There was an abnormal immigration to this country by men persuaded to come here by false and fraudulent pretences. Instead of being an ordinary immigration from Italy, Italians were coming into this country at the rate of 80,000 a year. Under influences that should be inquired into there did come, in one month, into New York, 50,000 men who did not know our language and who added nothing to our wealth or labor.

Morrow, of California, was glad the house at last comprehended the evil besetting the country from unrestricted immigration. The resolution was adopted.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the tariff bill, the agreement being that no vote should be taken on the pending wool schedule to-day.

Dugsdy of Ohio approved the schedule and said the duty on wool should be increased instead of reduced.

Morse of Massachusetts favored the bill as a general measure and especially the clause placing wool on the free list.

O'Donnell of Michigan said the attempt to place wool on the free list would injure one-fifteenth of the population of the country interested in wool growing. He appealed for the restoration of the duties of 1867.

McKinney of New Hampshire did not think placing wool on the free list would decrease the price of wool in this country, but would secure cheaper clothes, because it would enable the American manufacturers to compete with foreign manufacturers.

Caswell of Wisconsin protested against free wool as having the effect of destroying the sheep raising industry of his state.

Boatman of Ohio said placing wool on the free list struck a deadly blow at one of the industries of his district. He favored return to the wool schedule of 1867.

Hockery of Missouri controverted the argument that free wool would destroy the wool growing industry. It would be fair to expect a mother to desert her babe as to expect the democratic party to turn its back upon the laboring man who has always constituted its home and sinew.

Allen of Michigan said the Democrats had protected all of the products of the country south of the Mason and Dixon line and in the same breath charged republicans with sectionalism. If they believed they could strike at Michigan through her great staples, salt, lumber and wool, with impunity, they would learn better at the coming election.

Hanham of Texas said he had some doubt as to the propriety of the wool schedule, but he had resolved that doubt in favor of the duty which he owed to the party to which he belonged.

Dingley of Maine said since the bill had been launched in the press wool had declined seven cents a pound. If discussion of the bill had done this what would the bill itself do to the injury of the farmer?

Taylor of Ohio regarded the bill as a conspiracy for ultimate free trade, and attacked its general features, and more especially that feature placing wool on the free list.

The committee then rose and the house took a recess until 8 o'clock evening session for consideration of various private pension bills.

Devastation by Cyclone.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., July 12.—Passengers reaching here from the west this evening report last night's cyclone created terrible devastation between here and Albany, sweeping from the state line to East Chatham, leveling three paper mills, many houses, etc. It is supposed there has been some loss of life, but it is impossible to obtain particulars.

Sheridan Improving.

NONQUITT, Mass., July 12.—The only change in General Sheridan's condition during the last twenty-four hours has been in the condition of his nervous system. He slept well last night and has been very tranquil all day, more tranquil than at any previous time since his arrival here. It is now thirty-five days since he had the attack of heart failure.

Insurrection at Port au Prince.

PARIS, July 12.—A report has been received here that an insurrection has occurred at Port au Prince. The insurgents have burned five hundred houses, including most of the public buildings.

The export of bread stuffs from southern Russia during the coming autumn are expected to be enormous. Reports from Odessa indicate a harvest of immense promise.

MORTON NOTIFIED.

The Republican Committee Join in Informing Morton.

Formal Notification of His Nomination Presented.

He Accepts the Candidacy in a Brief Address.

The Republican Committee Organize for the Campaign.

Senator Quay of Pennsylvania Chosen Chairman.

Morton Officially Notified.

NEW YORK, July 7.—The members of the committee to officially notify Levi P. Morton of his nomination for the vice presidency went at early this morning. Judge W. W. Astor of California, chairman of the committee was received by Mr. Morton at 9 o'clock. Secretary Dougherty worked most of the night and took the train this morning. He went to the Grand Central depot and when he returned to the committee room he had with him a copy of the newspapers containing Astor's speech in Chicago and Dougherty had their place in his scrapbook to the address which was to be presented to Morton. The document is very brief and general in its terms, being less than a single page of paper. Only twenty-five of the 1000 delegates could not be found at the hotel and were not present when the notification was made. Governor Chase of Ohio did not accompany the committee to the hotel. The other gentlemen composing the committee, left as well as substitutes from other states.

Senator Sterling, Secretary Dougherty and Judge Astor, the committee for conference with the managers in charge of the convention, left the hotel at 10 o'clock for the place of the convention. The time of the drive was occupied in discussing the political situation.

NEW YORK, July 7.—The notification of Levi P. Morton of his nomination for the vice presidency by a committee of the Chicago convention, was the occasion for a gathering of prominent men at the residence of Mr. Morton this evening. Mr. Morton's living rooms were thronged with a brilliant assemblage of men and women. Mr. Morton himself was in black clothes and looking as splendid as he ever did. The reception room and receiving rooms of Mrs. Morton were filled with a brilliant assemblage of men and women, who had come to congratulate the newly nominated candidate for the vice presidency. Among those who were there were Senator Hawley, Senator Platt, Senator Sherman, Senator Evarts, Senator Frye, Senator Hoar

A TORY WEAPON.

Effect of the Legal Victory of the London Times.

O'Donnell, Censured for his Conduct of the Case.

Parnell Makes a Personal Statement in the Commons.

He States that Most of the Letters are Forgeries.

Effect of O'Donnell's Action.

NEW YORK, July 6.—A London correspondent says: There is great rejoicing in the result of O'Donnell's action against the Times and in the house of commons obloquy the tories and unionist politicians were exuberant in their manifestations of delight. That they have some cause for satisfaction is admitted even by Gladstonians and Parnellites. Chief Justice Coleridge in his eagerness for the sake of gratifying his own vanity and love of notoriety brought the action in a manner to lay into the hands of the Times lawyers and enable the defendants to treat their witnesses in the presence of a crowding and without giving the Irish leaders a fair chance of giving their evidence in the court of justice in which they were uttered. So galling were O'Donnell's attacks that Justice Coleridge was moved to indignation and publicly admonished a leading counsel to O'Donnell and his incompetent legal advisers. O'Donnell agreed that he acted throughout with the entire approval of his parliamentary colleagues, but his assertion cannot be accepted without reserve until we have heard what these gentlemen have to say on the subject. There are very good reasons for believing that it will be found to be entirely without foundation.

Out of the whole mass of misrepresentation and hoodwinking only one crumb of comfort can be found, and that is, the Times has been given to admit that it cannot or will not under any circumstances divulge the identity of those who supplied it with the documents which, so far as they relate to Mr. Parnell, we know are forgeries. Against this is to be set the verdict which the unionist press will be taken as judicial condemnation of the truth of the whole of the Times charges against the Irish leaders, in addition to the sentence which the jury accede to the verdict to the effect that the Times criticisms were obtained through the order in council.

It is to be hoped that the cause of loyal unionist temperance at any rate among the British voters by the proceedings of the last few days. No efforts will be spared by the tories and their unionist allies to circulate the story. Attorney General Webster from his soft place in court source forth against the Irish leaders day after day. Choice sections will be printed and scattered broadcast in every constituency. When the Times commenced its so called revelations millions of copies were distributed gratuitously by the Primrose league and other political tory organizations. The mark was overshot and it effect proved. But now they have apparently received judicial endorsement and the leaders of the tories are confident that O'Donnell has placed in their hands a weapon which a dexterity wielded may inflict a mortal wound to the Irish cause.

It is not so much as that, but Gladstonians are uneasy and anxious and are asking why should not Mr. Parnell adopt the attitude of proud and scornful reserve which he has consistently preserved since the commencement of this miserable business. Your correspondent saw the Irish leader at the house of commons this evening. He was as dignified and impressive as usual. No one would have supposed he was a man whose name has been on every living human's tongue a thousand times in connection with the vilest accusations. He did not see that there was any need for him to say anything on the subject. He gave the lie to the Times when it first published the charges and has since ignored them. He has expected to be called as a witness in the O'Donnell case and would then of course have repeated and emphasized his denial. But he has not been called and that seems to Mr. Parnell to end the matter as far as he was concerned.

When questioned as to certain specific allegations by the attorney general, Mr. Parnell said he could not see the wisdom or necessity of denying or even referring to those particular points in the case, but before he left him he gave me the impression that he was seriously considering the advisability of changing the tactics he has hitherto followed and of taking some effective means to justify himself in the eyes not of his own country, for that of course is not needed, but of his friends in Great Britain. That action will have reason to believe, consists in the first instance of a personal explanation in parliament.

Parnell Makes a Statement.

LONDON, July 6.—The Parnellites denounce O'Donnell for the course he pursued in his action against the Times. They suspect that Lynan, the man known as "No One," is the person from whom the Times got its information concerning the league. In the lobbies of the house of commons to-day members of the Irish party denied that Parnell ever paid Byrne one hundred pounds. They said the hundred pounds given by him was in the shape of a check signed by Justin McCarthy, and represented league subscriptions.

On assembling of the house of commons to-day Parnell rose to make an explanation concerning certain statements made in connection with the O'Donnell-Times trial. He said the action of the Times in withdrawing the charges against the Irish leaders was equivalent to a verdict of not guilty against them. The Times had published the charges without any inquiry as to their truth. The Times had published the charges against him (Parnell) on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Dillon and O'Brien on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Sexton on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Davitt on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Healy on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Harris on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Ellis on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Brennan on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Carey on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Egan on the strength of the letter of Mr. Byrne, which was now admitted to be a forgery. The Times had published the charges against Kilmainham

The best evidence of the prosperity of the Denver Republican is its purchase of a second perfecting press, which arrived on Monday. No newspaper west of the Missouri river is better equipped than the Republican for gathering news or printing it.

There seems to be a determined effort on the part of the democratic party to have the Knoxville incident that Harrison is not their friend. Chief Arthur, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, pays a high tribute to Harrison, and says: "Knowing his friendly attitude towards organized labor, and his nomination is a strong one, for his record contains nothing to prevent any republican workingman from voting for him."

George William Curtis, in his speech for Cleveland at Gettysburg, said: "It is not enough that the election be fair, it must be the national conviction that it is fair." Curtis, either to mislead the honest Mugwumps, or in his estimation of at least one half the people of this country.

Mr. Harrison is said to be a very cold man. His speeches have warmth in them. In a discussion in 1882 with Voorhees, who was professing to be the soldiers' friend, he said, this language:

"Those who fled throughout the war of the Rebellion and did not make some sacrifice for the success of the union armies, and who did not say one brave word or do one brave thing when, with bare and bleeding breasts our soldiers looked into the face of death for their country, can never be reckoned as the soldiers' friends."

We entirely agree with the editor of the World that the republican convention did not intend to endorse any such sentiment as that three fourths of the residents of this country are against it. It was simply tricked by our representatives. This was clearly demonstrated in 1887, when Judge Foster was urging the repeal of the tax on whiskey. Those who do not endorse this plank need have no qualms about supporting Harrison, because this will never be his policy nor the policy of the party.

There seems to be by some reason for believing that the line in Queen's canyon was started by campers on a picnic party. Now where the line starters were found the remnants of a lunch. The county commissioners ought to inquire into this matter. People who kindle fires in our canyons and mountains and do not put them out ought to be made to pay the damages, and we come we afford to make an example of this party. Such reckless people ought not to be permitted to go about without guardians.

The deep water convention which meets at Fort Worth on Tuesday is attracting great deal of interest. This is a subject in which the people of Colorado are very much interested. It is to be hoped the convention will make no specific recommendations, because the members cannot sufficiently inform themselves to vote intelligently. The better way would be for the convention to request the government to appoint a competent commission which shall make a thorough investigation of all the harbors and device which is the most advisable to improve. Then the government can concentrate its expenditures on this subject.

The Pall Mall Budget says that Colonel G. E. Gouraud has received the first perfected phonograph in England from Mr. Edison. In sending it with some grim humor, Mr. Edison, the Pall Mall says, requested Colonel Gouraud to communicate with him in future solely by phonograph that he may be saved the trouble of deciphering a style of writing "not always too legible." This suggests a use of the phonograph which was not thought of. It will be a matter of indifference now, whether one can spell or not. It is only necessary to pronounce correctly and speak grammatically. Only the dumb will need to write and spell.

People have just discovered that Harrison is an orator. His public life has been largely confined to one term in the senate. As it was his first term, he did not speak in the beginning and rarely in the latter part. But a good many of his Indiana speeches delivered in the last ten years have been unearthed, and have been found to be good reading. These speeches will make an important part of the campaign literature. A few utterances like the following make very good banner inscriptions: "The success of the republican party has always been identified with the glory of the flag and the unity of the government."

The board of trade considered Friday night the advisability of building a new county road to Austonville. Prof. Stone showed that there was really a demand for this road. In the old days when the county was sparsely settled, it was altogether too expensive to secure good roads. There were few fences and drivers could go wherever they chose. But the country is now so thoroughly fenced in and so thickly settled that it is important that there should be direct roads to all important parts of the county, kept in good condition. We can afford now to put in substantial bridges and run the roads in the most direct and at the same time most feasible line. The tax payers of the county would be very willing to expend twenty-five thousand dollars during this year in building necessary county roads and putting others in repair.

There is a good deal of talk as to what shall be done with the cottonwoods in the business part of the city. We threw out a suggestion yesterday that we might give an irrigation in that part of the city. But there are very strong objections on the part of many to giving up the shade trees in the center of the town. Of course it is only a question of time when they will all be removed, but some of our people are anxious to keep them as long as possible. It is quite evident, however that the wooden boxes must go. If long the law were enforced forbidding the sweeping of store dirt into the ditches and throwing garbage into them, they would still be very unsanitary and disagreeable. If we are to keep the trees and continue irrigating, it would be much better to put in cobble stone or cement gutters having openings where there are trees. These gutters will be kept uncovered and could easily be kept clean.

The best thing the brotherhood of engineers can do is to see are the strike off on the Burlington line. It is nothing but a farce as it is at present and is only a temptation to the men who have lost positions to do lawless acts. If any of the minor officers are caught, they should be punished to the extent of the law, for they are responsible for declaring the strike. But there ought to be a great deal of sympathy for the engineers. Most of them had no part whatever in ordering the strike and simply struck to obey orders. After they had struck, they could not go back to work without suffering the ignominy of being termed "scabs." Some of these engineers had recently bought homes which were partly paid for. The future was bright. Their families were comfortable. Now they have been out of work for months, are in debt, and will probably not be able to realize much from the homes they had partly paid for. We do not wonder that they are with high spirits.

The branch of the Colorado Humane society in this county is already showing its usefulness. It has been the custom to send children to the city crowded so closely in the coops that many of them would arrive dead. The Denver society issued an order limiting the number that should be put in a coop of a certain size, and also requiring that water should be given them. Through the secretary of the society similar orders have been given in this city. One of the expressmen said that he was very glad the order had been given, that he had delivered one coop within a few days in which nine chickens were found dead, simply because they were too closely packed, in the coop and were not properly provided with water in transit. On Tuesday a train ran into a cow and broke its hip in a cut just below the city. The railroad officials would not kill the cow, because orders had been given that they should not do it within the city limits. The agent of the society, Sheriff Jackson, put the animal out of pain. The ways in which the society can do good are almost innumerable, and it is a matter of congratulation that they have started out so actively.

According to Mr. Cannon, we received last year some sixty millions from the tax on sugar. Last year our own production was so small that the tax raised the price of the product in this country only six millions of dollars; or, in other words, it cost us nearly sixty millions to obtain sixty millions of protection. This proposed amendment carries out the principle of American protection, by giving a bounty to each sugar producer equal to the protection, or two cents a pound. By this means we shall wipe out sixty millions of income and increase our liabilities six millions more, the bounty, or, in other words, reduce our surplus sixty-six millions. This is about all that it is safe to reduce it at the present time, and will give all the relief that is needed. It will make more than twice the reduction of the surplus that the repeal of the tax on tobacco would. Besides it will reduce about thirty per cent the cost of sugar, which is a necessary article of food for every man, woman and child, instead of making an inappreciable reduction in the cost of a luxury which is only used by men. But congress yesterday, in its inscrutable wisdom, voted down Cannon's amendment.

Fitz-Hue, in the Denver World, speaking of the republican platform, says: "It is the worst written paper that we ever remember to have seen exposed to the public. But its faults end with its clumsy rhetoric." Then goes on to say: "Its principles are as pure as refined gold, and so clear, so strong, so efficient that even the county and hanging lawyers in which they are invested cannot obscure their virgin light of truth." He then goes on to say this:

> We know a very intelligent republican paper in Colorado which is continually deploring the "free whiskey" plank in the platform. There is no free whiskey plank in the platform at all, and the editor of the paper alluded to is too intelligent to get any such notion from reading the platform. He has undoubtedly imbibed it from some other source, some prohibition sheet.

Whether this paper is a good one or not, it is one of the papers that has complained of the "free whiskey" plank. This opinion could not come from the prohibitionists, for the prohibitionists are in favor of the same plank, and it came from the platform itself. The republican platform declares in favor of the necessary reduction of the national revenue by the repeal of the taxes on tobacco and spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes. It says: "There will still remain a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the government, we favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes, rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system." It is perfectly evident that the repeal of the internal revenue tax on tobacco and spirits used in the arts will not wipe out the surplus. It is evident that there must be some further reduction of the income of the government. The men who drew the platform evidently meant that the reduction should come by the abolition of the whiskey tax, rather than the abolition of the tax on a necessity like sugar. The editor of the World is conversant with the discussions of the last six years on the tariff question, he will know that the extreme protectionists so-called Mr. McKinley strike are strongly in favor of the abolition of the whiskey tax. An effort was made to do this in 1882. But there was so little howling in the republican party for such a movement that it failed. At that time Mr. Harrison did not whine against such a measure. If any one is able to interpret this platform, it is certainly Judge Foster whose sentiments on protection it expresses. Last Saturday there was quite a sharp discussion on the interpretation of the platform between Judge Foster and Representative Cannon, of Illinois. Because Mr. Cannon desired to have the repeal of the duty on sugar, and at the same time give a bounty to sugar growers equal to the protection now received from the tariff, Judge Foster said that Cannon did not stand on the platform, which distinctly favors the repeal of the tax on whiskey to the surrender of any part of our protective system, of which sugar is a part. He was accused of being for free whiskey, and in reply used the following language:

> Here is one man who since 1884 has pleaded and urged that we follow the example of the builders of the country, and abolish internal revenue taxes and cut the accursed thing, whiskey, in all its forms, under the charge of the respective states of the union, where it costs the people, and where the revenue derived from it runs to crime and insanity will go into the treasury that has to bear the expenses of vice, crime, idleness and the secretary insanity engendered by taxed out of poison whiskey. The convention cried, encore him, and he was ready to say: "Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen the glory of the republican party." (Laughter.

The Republican of last Sunday contained the following some protective doctrine:

> Wisdom dictates that we shall do what we can to develop our own industries before we undertake to encourage the industries of other lands by making a market for their products at the expense of our own people. Other nations, and most notably England, always adopt policies which seem to promise the greatest benefits to themselves, and we should do likewise. It is no part of our mission to furnish markets for the workshops of Europe when our own activities are capable of supplying all our needs. Even though some of our tariff duties are higher than the revenue needs of the government seem to require, the wealth thus accumulated in the treasury remains in the country and will be of use to all the people in some way at some time. Indirectly, at least, it is of use to all the people now, in so far as it aids in retaining the American market for the American producer.

We are importing millions of dollars worth of manufactured goods which could be produced in this country. If the tariff were fixed sufficiently high, they would not be imported, but would be produced in this country. A protection that protects will greatly decrease importation. It is perfectly evident if this is done that our revenue will be decreased. Then we cannot afford to do away entirely with our internal revenue taxes. If we are to have a tariff for revenue, then we can very easily raise all that is necessary to pay the expenses of the government from customs duties. But if we are to have a tariff for protection, then we should arrange this tariff so as to get the least possible income, except on those articles which we cannot produce and which are pure luxuries. The friends of protection, therefore, ought to be the strong friends of the internal revenue tax and ought at the same time to insist on a tariff which is as nearly prohibitory as possible, so as to provide work for American workmen.

America, published in Chicago, is presenting every week an issue not less important than any agitated in the present campaign. This issue is, that America shall be for Americans; that we shall welcome all foreigners here who will become Americans, but that we shall not have little Germans or Chinas or Frenchs or Poles or Italys located all over this country. If the attempt to introduce European politics into our national politics continues, there will be a reaction among the people that will not be unlike the know-nothing party of '55. It is a singular fact that both political parties at their national conventions passed resolutions expressing sympathy with one of the political parties of one of the European powers. If the resolution been in favor of government by the people, it would have been a right. But the resolution committed each party to a factious issue in a foreign government. It would have been quite as appropriate for either one of the great parties of England to have passed resolutions sympathizing with the north or south during the rebellion. If this had been done the people in this country would have considered the act impertinent. America has given a good deal of attention to this subject and gives, weekly, several good illustrations of the importance of protecting our institutions. A few days ago a graduate of the Chicago high school, had a very conservative oration pointing out the dangers to America of unrestricted immigration. No foreign-born citizen could object to what he said, provided that foreign-born citizen came here with the intention of becoming an American, yet a number of the Chicago board of education rose and rebuked this American student for his loyalty to American ideas. Chicago is supposed to be an American city, and native Americans at least should control such secularly American institutions as the public school system. But this board consists of fifteen members, of whom seven are naturalized foreigners, two Africans, and six native Americans. Of the six appointed by the mayor two weeks ago, four were foreign born. This country has always gloried in the name of being an asylum for the oppressed of all nations. But if we receive a foreign population which does not assimilate with American ideas and feelings, it can no longer continue to be such an asylum. We welcome all foreigners who wish to come here and share the privileges of this government and become Americans, and wish them to come as fast as they assimilate themselves to American ideas, but no faster. Those who do not, intend to become Americans should not be encouraged to come any more than the Chinese. Just now we are thinking a great deal of the material prosperity of the country. This is reasonable. But we must not be unmindful of the danger, not to our material wealth, but to our political purity and freedom, which is coming from unrestricted immigration.

It has been frequently said since Harrison was nominated that the mugwumps would vote for him. So far, not a single objection has been raised by any mugwump to him as a candidate. But a few mugwumps have decided to vote against him simply because of the platform. Among the notable instances of this kind are Matthew Hale, of Albany, New York, one of the most eminent lawyers in New York state, Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn, and Seth Low, of Brooklyn. Seth Low has come back into the party and was made president of the state convention of '86. But while he says he will support the republican state ticket in New York, he cannot support the national ticket because of the platform. While there is ample ground for the objections which these gentlemen raise to the platform, yet the objections are features of the platform are hardly sufficient excuse for voting the democratic ticket. This fall, every republican administration in the last twenty-five years and every republican congress has stood on the platform of '88, which favors the raising of no more taxes than is necessary to support the government, and such a revision of the taxes as will lower the cost of the necessities of life without injuring any industry or lowering the wages of American mechanics. Four-fifths of the party today really believe in the platform of '88. Four-fifths will be opposed to the abolition of the tax on whiskey. This section of the party does not therefore mean the triumph of any principles that are opposed to those enunciated in the republican platform of '88; in the messages of Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Arthur; in the reports of secretaries of the treasury like Boutwell, Bristow, Morrill, Sherman, Windom, Folger and McCulloch, and in the reports of the republican committees of the senate and house on the tariff in 1882. We can afford to vote for the party on its record, which is so full and complete, and ignore the eccentricities of 1888.

The platform of 1888 must be the basis of any legislation by either party. The only issue is really this: Shall the republicans or democrats be entrusted with the revision? Shall the friends of the tariff or the south be entrusted with this duty. We may say what we will, but Hancock was right in saying that the tariff was, to a large degree, a local question, though it cost him his election. If the revision of the tariff is turned over to the democratic party, then the revision will be solely in the interests of the south. In the house of representatives to day the strongest influence is southern, because three-fourths of the democratic members are southerners. The bill that a democratic house passes must practically receive the unanimous support of the south. Under these circumstances, the bill would of necessity take a southern hue. The south has a right to protect its interests, but it would be a misfortune to have our whole tariff rearranged from a southern point of view. It must be revised by a democratic house, passed by a democratic senate and signed by a president elected by the south. The bill is sufficient evidence of what we aim in the above.

There is another consideration which should influence these mugwumps. There has been no great danger in the supremacy of a democratic administration, for the simple reason that the senate has always been republican and could prevent any extraordinary legislation. But the senate may in the next two years be democratic. If so, every department of the government would be in the hands of the south. While we do not raise the sectional issue, we do feel that the south should share in the administration of this government rather than be the absolute arbiter of its destiny.

These two considerations should influence independent voters who are justly disgusted with the platform. A patriotic desire to place one, at least, of the departments of the government in the hands of those who saved it should outweigh any desire to snub the small trucking politicians who put the party in a false position in the platform.

The investigation of Harrison's Chinese record is not doing him any harm. It shows that Mr. Harrison was actuated in his position by generous sentiments of our American institutions and by honest maintenance of his convictions. Like a great many others in the east, his ideas of late have changed regarding Chinese immigration. But it should be remembered that the anti Chinese agitation began with Denis Kearney, of sand lots notoriety, and did not enlist the sympathy of the better class of people. A more intimate knowledge of the situation on the Pacific coast has since modified the opinions of the east. General Harrison is among those who have modified their views. This is shown by a letter written to Mr. L. B. Brandt of St. Louis, in February last, some months before he was nominated for president, probably. The letter was written in answer to a letter written by Mr. Brandt, inquiring about Mr. Harrison's position on the Chinese question, and is as follows:

> INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 20, 1888.—Rev. L. B. Brandt, St. Louis, Mo.: My DEAR SIR—Your kind letter of February 28 has been received. I am very much obliged to you for the kind interest which you take in my behalf. You knew me well enough while here to know that I am no scamper for place, and have not fallen from grace in that respect since you left here.
>
> I did vote with the great body of the republicans in the senate against the Chinese restriction bill as it was called. It seemed to me then to be in violation of our treaty with China, and it was a little hard for me to get off the old idea that this was the free home of all comers. I think there has been a very general change of sentiment on that subject since. We do not need to fear anybody coming to this country now as we formerly did, and I think we have a right to preserve our own institutions by excluding a class of people who do not like our institutions, and who come here, not like the immigration that comes in gangs, but can be driven into gangs and controlled, and direct, not by personal contract, but by bosses. The Chinese immigration is very much of this sort.
>
> Very truly yours,
> BENJ. HARRISON.

In a speech at Terre Haute, Commodore Richard W. Thompson, ex secretary of the navy, recently told a little incident which will not prove injurious to Morton, but may win as much strength among the rising to the ticket as Blaine's name could have won. Thompson said:

> When I was secretary of the navy I was commanded by congress to send a ship to New York to transport provisions to the starving Irelanders. I sent the ship to the port, but the contributions were so small I was discouraged and embarrassed. The ship was not a ship. One day a gentleman came into my office to inquire about it. "That ship," said he, "has got to go. Go on and get her ready. I'll hand out of my own pocket the pay thousands of dollars to war during bread in the mouths of the starving families." That man was Levi P. Morton. The tremendous cheering. He did no wish his charity trumpeted to the world, and did not seek fame because of his charitable deeds. He enjoined secrecy from me. That is what I call grand charity. (Cheers.) This is the first time I have ever made a public announcement of it. His heart is open to charitable work as the day, and the recording angel will trace deeds like that in a bright beam of light. I thought my time had come at the Chicago convention to tell the story which he was there in nomination. (Cheers.) The reason I did not was this: I was too modest to speak to so large an audience." (Laughter and cheers.

Fiftieth Congress.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—A motion to refer to the committee on pensions the veto of pensions bills was made the ground-work of a speech by Stewart against the frequent exercise of the veto power by the president.

Vest followed in support of the president's veto.

The senate, on motion of Cullom, proceeded to consideration of the senate bill to amend the inter-state commerce bill.

Reagan referred to the amendment, which was agreed to, giving United States circuit and district courts jurisdiction of violation of any provision of the act upon relation of any person or firm, with power to issue peremptory writ of mandamus. Reagan said he had given notice of an amendment extending the provisions of the act to express companies, sleeping car companies and stock car companies, but as it was likely to provoke discussion and retard passage of the bill he would reserve the proposition for the next session.

He offered a similar statement in regard to an amendment which would prevent railroad companies charging higher rates from the Pacific coast to Denver than to Kansas City.

Reagan intimated that the commission had shown too much vacillating disposition in dealing with railroad companies.

Wilson of Iowa also criticized the commission for construing some provisions of the law to the advantage of railroad companies.

George offered an amendment prohibiting carriers from transporting goods for any shipper in a car or vehicle owned by such shipper, unless they charged exactly the same rates as were charged to other shippers.

Finally the amendment was withdrawn on the promise of Cullom to have the question thoroughly considered at the next session.

After further discussion the bill passed.

The house bill to regulate judgments and decrees of courts of the United States (with amendments) passed.

After an executive session the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

In the house today Adams, of Illinois, offered a resolution reciting the resolution directing the committee on manufactures to investigate the subject of trusts, stating that the scope of the investigation was so broad as to render impracticable for the committee to make its report at the present session, and directing the committee to report immediately with or without recommendation all evidence taken by it relating to the so-called sugar trust, and also in a separate report to report evidence relating to the so-called Standard Oil trust. Referred to the committee on rules.

Conger, of Michigan, offered a resolution reciting the allegation that the present immigration into the United States is excessive, artificial and injurious, and is encouraged to satisfy private greed, and the further allegation that the law prohibiting importation of contract labor is being evaded, owing to the lack of sufficient machinery to enforce it, and directing the speaker to reappoint a special committee of five to investigate the subject with leave to sit during recess. Referred to the committee on military affairs.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the tariff bill, the pending question being on the Cannon amendment placing on the free list sugar not above the 16 standard, requiring the rates on other grades, and granting a bounty to the producers of sugar.

The amendment was rejected—108 to 34.

Dingley of Maine offered an amendment fixing the duty on sugar not above 13 Dutch standard, testing not above 75 degrees, 1/100 of a cent per pound, with an additional duty of 1/200 of a cent per pound for each additional degree or fraction of a degree.

Bayne of Pennsylvania hoped Dingley's proposition would prove acceptable to every republican and democrat on the floor. The Mills bill proposed 68 per cent and the Dingley amendment proposed 71 per cent. The amendment would reduce the revenue $29,000,000. If the amendment was adopted it would amount to a saving of 50 cents per every man, woman and child. It would have the effect of breaking up the sugar trust; and if the democrats voted against the proposition the people this fall would draw the necessary and proper inference.

The amendment was lost, 86 to 105.

Evans of Tennessee said it made little difference now the republicans voted. This bill was apparently as immutable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, and no changes could be made except for the accommodation of some democratic member from a district where to sustain action on the free list would endanger his re-election. Duty should be put upon sugar or it should be put on the free list, but away with bounty. The American people wanted none of it.

McComas of Maryland inquired of democratic members of the ways and means committee whether on March 26 they had not given a hearing to Mr. Havemeyer of New York who had been examined on the 12th of that month before the committee on manufactures.

Amongst the correspondence between Breckinridge, Mills and McComas, in which Breckinridge and Mills denied the charge that certain parties had been granted a hearing before the ways and means committee and others refused.

On motion of Mills the duty on molasses testing not above 56 degrees was fixed at 4 cents per gallon.

Cannon of Illinois offered an amendment substituting for the sugar schedule as it originally appeared in the Mills bill. He intimated that the change had been brought about by the fact that Havemeyer had supported Cleveland.

Reed inquired if the chairman of the committee would not explain the reason why the change had been made.

Mills retorted by inquiring why it was then that in former congresses the gentleman had stood by this great cheat.

Cannon queried whether two wrongs make a right.

Mills wanted to know why it was that the gentleman had stood by Havemeyer and the sugar trust and all other trusts.

Reed said there was a direct charge made against the committee that after the interview with Havemeyer they had the sugar schedule changed in the interest of the most prominent of these trusts which they denounced so much, and instead of explaining the reason which induced the change the chairman of the committee gives the house a general declaration of how good he was and how bad the republicans were. It seemed the bill had been made up in the interest of avowedly favorite people, and forrest purpose of effecting the success of certain democrats. This was not a business way to control the affairs of the country, and the people would stamp it with the signal of disapproval.

Cannon's amendment was rejected.

Weber of New York offered an amendment providing that no drawbacks shall be allowed on sugar exported from the United States. He charged that the amended bill was in the interest of the sugar trust of the country.

Weber's amendment being rejected, he offered another providing drawbacks to be paid only upon polariscopic tests, saying that this was the last resort of the sugar trust, and gentlemen on the other side have now an opportunity to free themselves from the suspicion which would be certain if they voted down his proposition.

Mills replied that treasury officials already had authority to make polariscopic tests. After further debate the amendment was rejected.

Adjourned.

San Diego a Living Competitor with Her Fellow Cities of the California Valleys for the Prizes of the Future—Notes of a Recent Trip.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, July 2. The traveler approaching San Diego from the north traverses a country somewhat different from that to be seen elsewhere on the Pacific coast. The lowlands as you approach the city grow green with pastures; and, though the scene has not a familiar aspect, there is something analogous in it to what one might see in Pennsylvania or Kentucky. Occasionally the train passes below wooded heights that rise on either side and lift up to the summit. There, nodding on small herds of cattle, of good breeds, helping themselves to rich pasturage. There is also a more beautiful distribution of water than the curious reader of a running stream here and there or a pond that a Californian might identify for the name of lake. In these low parts the rains everywhere are abundance of water to feed. As the train passes they skim out on the surface at a right angle, and leave a vacuation on the water like a rippling furrow drawn by the keel. We shoot at them now and then, a sport which is, doubtless, more amusing to the ducks than to our ladies.

It is wonderful and delightful when our train approaches San Diego. There is a little flurry of preparation, a little excitement for a view of the ocean on our right, and hope we are. The passenger under prospect at the Hotel St. James, just a few rods from the ferry, crosses the bay and made with all speed for the famous Coronado. There is not for anything; the city does not provide for the more sensational pleasures.

Those of us who crossed the harbor, to spend the night on the Coronado beach, were astonished on coming out on the porch of the hotel to hear a sort of tumult and roar, as if a battle and rain storm had combined, their energies outside. We went to the window, and here it is. The breakers below, tumbling and roaring as if every battalion of the hotel. All night long the sublime symphony was on the key, and it was time for infinite ages, every bar the speech of man. Welcome to its report. We hear in its music the thunder, its rhythm of the surf and its perpetual benediction on the shore. It was the throb of the sea; so the poet called down Thalassa of Homer, in the days of the Ægean islands, and invoked the aid of ancient Pelogos [illegible] the pulse beat and [illegible] of the sounding hexameters.

With the morning light we were all astir on both sides of the peninsula, what times soever San Diego lies in repose. The writer in early morning [illegible] the shore opposite the hotel, from which a fine view can be had of all below. The car that carried him up to the summit was propelled by electricity. Even so it is that we have [illegible] and journeyed from the [illegible] of the Union, leapfrogged by the development and boasting much of the accumulation of the progressive forces [illegible] the extreme northwest and extreme southwest of our country to what was an old Spanish town, to take our first ride in an electric car.

San Diego is a living competitor with her fellow cities of the California valleys, for the prizes of the future. It is expected, however, to see a better equal to Los Angeles in population and enterprise than San Diego is able to present. The Queen of the Angels has fully [illegible] as many people, according to her estimate, and the southern city will have to travel far before she comes up with her rival. Nevertheless, many things may be truthfully said of the vigor recently display in the dead sleep of the city of the south; and to the efforts which her citizens are putting forth to secure her rank and influence [illegible] the ever memorable factor in [illegible] Harbor.

I have already remarked upon the variety of havens along the Pacific coast, and have said something as to the relative merits of the bay of San Diego and that of San Francisco. I repeat that the former is [illegible] as fine an inland [illegible] of water as may be found on the shores of any ocean. While we were in the city, one of the Government ironclads came to anchor at the pier, and the heaviest ship of any sort could do the same. Besides, the bay, though [illegible] of the largest dimensions, is sufficient [illegible] Angeles should be [illegible] San Diego may well [illegible] by showing a map of her splendid harbor.

Only a few years ago this Coronado beach was merely a long, low plain of sand. Nothing could be less promising in its natural aspect than was this desert beach. But the shrewd eye of enterprise saw the possibilities of the situation; the peninsula is already rechristened; palm trees are here; a park is there; flowers are blooming in the new made lawns; and yonder rises one of the finest hotels in America. It is not yet completed at the time of our visit, but is sufficiently advanced to receive some hundred or two of guests. The structure is of wood. The building is a great quadrangle, including, within, the largest hotel court between the Atlantic and the Pacific. The court is a sward crossed with stone walks and having a fine fountain in the center. The most fragrant flowers and beautiful shrubs are planted here and there; and the air brings to the senses of the guest the sweet perfume of early or perennial blossoms. The marvels of the hotel are the magnificent court, the ample theater in one part of the structure and the beautiful dining hall not yet finished. The latter will be one of the most elegant in the country. It is a parabola in shape, and finished throughout in redwood; whether of the sequoia semper virens or of cedar, I am not certain. The Hotel Coronado as a whole is worthy to take equal rank with two others in California—the Del Monte, of Monterey, and the Raymond, of Pasadena. These three constitute a group by themselves, and above them is seen only the Palace of San Francisco.

A walk of a few minutes from the north steps of the Del Coronado brings us to an ostrich farm. Why the word farm is applied to it I hardly know. It has a comparatively small area of ground, perhaps an acre. It is bounded with a close fence, high enough to prevent the escape of the ostriches. Of these there are thirteen, in a sort of corral, inside the inclosure. Their three pronged, grotesque feet have beaten every sign of vegetation from the arena; and they have the pleasure of sauntering about over the sand as in their native desert. Some of these solemn creatures are black as to their wing feathers and tail, others a kind of saffron color, and both varied with patches of white. Some parts of their bodies present only a surface of wrinkled skin. The beak is rather useful than aggressive in its construction, and the eye is the most strangely introspective organ that I ever saw in bird or beast. It suggests to you that the possessor has been studying into the mysteries of Buddhism, and expects, in due course of time, to enter into Nirvana.

A male ostrich of good development can reach over a large horse and get an orange out of the stirrup on the other side. Having done so, he swallows it whole and you can see the globe majestically and slowly descending the gullet. Doubtless the ostrich has a longer taste than any other living creature, excepting the giraffe. He will swallow five or six such trifles as oranges one after another, and you can see the protruding knots in his long and twisted œsophagus as they gradually work their way down stairs. He could perform several curves of a minuet before the last disappears from sight.

What is an ostrich farm for? It is for the production of ostriches. And what are the ostriches for. They are for the production of feathers, and the feathers are for sale. Your vigorous well grown ostrich may be plucked every six months, and the less hardy birds every eight or nine months. The yield of feathers from each is from one to one and a half pounds, and the farmer receives for his product from $40 to $60 a pound. An extra bird sometimes yields $100 worth of feathers at a time. When the plucking season arrives, the birds are harnessed up in a narrow stall and carefully blindfolded, for fear the officiating clergyman may be kicked through the fence. The ostrich becomes exceedingly angry with the pulling of his feathers, and his kick is one of the most swift and dangerous reactions ever excited among the muscles and tentions of animated nature. When the bird is angry he lifts his wings, throws forward his head somewhat, and utters a sort of hiss, which he hisses off with a snap of his bill. About this time look out for action.

After our visit to the ostrich farm we made our way down to the beach and spent some hours on the shore of the Pacific. Here, for the first time in my life, I had an opportunity to study and compare this majestic water with the other seas and oceans. One might as well suppose that an ocean is an ocean, without its characteristic features; that one is as the other; but not so. The ocean is glorious in its individuality as in its strength and grandeur. In the first place, the sky has an ever varying condition. The Pacific coast is totally different from that of the Atlantic, in that it is almost everywhere precipitous, broken off square down to the deep. Sometimes the precipice is hundreds of feet in height. Sometimes the square wall, which is thus far of the surf, is long and low but rarely do we have the gentle sloping beach peculiar to the Atlantic shores. If you stand upon the precipice of the Pacific and look down to the surf you shall find almost everywhere a quarter or a half mile of shingle, which is the debatable ground alternately covered and uncovered by the tide. At high tide the ocean roars against the foot of the precipice, and no beach is seen; but at the low tide the surf lies out at a considerable distance, and thousands of people may gather down there on the strand between the ocean wall and the breaker of the sea. Such is the general aspect of all those parts of the Pacific coast which I have visited.

The next [illegible] is that of the greater grandeur of the Pacific as to the visual expression, the length and height of the billows and the majesty of the ocean symphony. I do not know how it is that the Pacific can [illegible] its great and almightiness to the beholder on the shore; it may be its own knowledge that infinity is before him but the scene does more than, in some way, that the infinite is there. The incoming billows, even when the sea is most calm, are according to my estimate, from ten to twenty feet in perpendicular height. Each wave stretches laterally for miles and miles.

The ocean rhythm has its mathematical and musical succession. It has its mighty poetical foot. It has an anapest, or a dactyl, an amphibrach or a molossus, according to the mood of the spirit that broods upon the waters.

> At the foot of thy crags, O sea;
> But the tender grace of the day that is dead
> Will never come back to me.

JOHN CLARE RIDPATH.

Brooks' Last Hope Gone.

ST. LOUIS, July 12. The governor this morning received his decision in which he declines to grant commutation of sentence in the case of Brooks, alias Maxwell, but granted a respite for four weeks.

The first news Brooks received this morning was that the governor had simply granted him a respite for twenty one days. This is construed to mean that the governor intended to take time to fully examine the case. Later Brooks received a telegram from his attorney announcing a respite of three weeks, and stating that the governor refused absolutely to commute the sentence or interfere in the matter. This was a sad blow to Brooks' hopes, and he said he could not understand it. The fact confident the governor would see his way clear and grant his appeal for commutation, but now all hope was gone and he must prepare for death.

An Extensive Storm.

NEW YORK, July 2.—Advices from all parts of New York, New Jersey and New England show that a terrific rain and wind storm raged last night. The storm was particularly severe along the coast, and many sailing vessels were driven ashore. No large loss of life is reported, but the damage to property is large. The storm was very severe along the St. Lawrence and on Lake Ontario. At Cape Vincent the Shamrock and Minnie Maurice, small passenger steamers, were driven ashore and a number of barges sunk. At Sandy Hook this afternoon the storm continued and the sea was very rough.

FIRE ISLAND, N. Y., July 12.—The United States light house steamer has just run aground while entering the inlet. She is flying a signal of distress. The captain of the life saving station has gone to her assistance. A fresh gale is blowing from the northwest and a heavy sea running.

BOSTON, July 12.—The greatest damage done by the storm last night in this vicinity, so far as heard from, was occasioned at City Point. It is reported nearly a dozen yachts, large and small, were sunk during the night and several persons sleeping in them were drowned. It is known that one man on board a boat lying at the foot of M street was drowned, and the police boat will go over today to search for bodies. Many trees were blown down, obstructing travel.

Offer to Parnell.

LONDON, July 12.—Parnell, in an interview to-night, referring to the government's offer to appoint a committee of judges to inquire into the charges of the Times, said he welcomed the principle contained in the proposal. He welcomed an independent tribunal of able, learned and wise men. It was impossible for him to say more until he had seen the proposed bill. He objected to Justice Stephen, who, it is rumored, will be appointed on the committee, on the ground that he is a violent extremist.

EUROPEAN WAR FLEETS.

A Formidable Collection in the Harbor of Barcelona.

U.S.S. "QUINNEBAUG,"
BARCELONA HARBOR, June 29, 1888.

The recent opening of the international exposition in this city was the means of bringing together one of the largest, as well as one of the most formidable, fleets of men-of-war ever assembled. Every class of fighting ship was represented, from huge, armour-clad "battle-ships," armed with monster guns each weighing upwards of 100 tons, and manned by a crew of more than 600 men, down to diminutive but aggressive torpedo-boats, whose slender black hulls were scarcely noticeable among their gigantic neighbors. There were, all told, six-six vessels of war in this harbor. It required but a glance at their names to realize that they included the pride of the navies of Europe. England, France and Italy were each represented by a magnificent squadron of modern ships, and every other maritime country of the continent displayed its national colors from the peak of one or more of its men-of-war.

Of the various navies represented, the Italian squadron was undoubtedly the most formidable. Its sixteen vessels include the famous ironclads, Duilio, Dandolo, Lepanto and Italia. The others were: The Etna, Bausan, Trinoi, Castelfidardo, Fogore, Goito, Saetta and Vesuvio, and torpedo-boats Nos. 99, 100, 10 and 98.

I can only describe the chief features of the four world-renowned Italian ironclads just mentioned in my list, but these four represent much more than one-half of the fighting capacity of the whole Italian squadron. The Italia and Lepanto are sister ships, that is, alike in every particular of their construction. They are 400 feet long, 72 feet 9 inches wide, have twin screws, and are manned by a crew of 680 men. They carry 3,500 tons of coal, have a displacement of 13,895 tons, an indicated horse-power of 18,000, and attain a speed of 18 knots per hour. The engines and boilers are protected overhead by an armor deck 3½ inches thick, curved so as to deflect the enemy's shot, and the ships' sides are covered with 18 inches of armor. The principal armament consists of four 100-ton breech loading Armstrong rifles, mounted in barbettes on the upper deck; eight 6-inch breech loading rifles, six mounted in broadside on the upper deck, and one at the bow, and one at the stern, on the upper deck. In addition to these there are six smaller guns of about 5 inches caliber and fourteen machine guns. The ships are divided by bulkheads into numerous water-tight compartments, and the barbettes enclosing the heavy guns are protected by seventeen inches of armor. There are four launching tubes for discharging torpedoes. The torpedoes used are the Whitehead, belonging to what is known as the torpedo or "fish" class. Compressed air is employed to eject the torpedoes from the discharging tubes, after which, upon reaching the water, they are propelled by their own engines and explode upon impact with the enemy's ships.

The Duilio and Dandolo, also sister ships, are 340 feet long, 65 feet wide, and have a displacement respectively of 11,138 and 11,251 tons. They carry a crew of 430 men; have twin screws, to give greater facility in turning and maneuvring; have an indicated horse-power of 7500, and attain a speed of 15 knots per hour. Their batteries consist of four 100-ton muzzle loading Armstrong rifles, mounted in pairs in two turrets on the upper deck. The turrets are protected by 18 inches of armor, and the ship's sides by 21 inches. Like the Italia and Lepanto, the Duilio and Dandolo are divided into water-tight compartments by transverse and longitudinal bulkheads, but the turrets of the latter two ships, unlike the barbettes of the former, are arranged to revolve around their centres similar to those of a monitor.

A remarkable feature of the Duilio, another sister-ship, is a little "dock," situated in the centre line of the vessel, near the stern, beneath an armoured deck and partly below the surface of the water. The dock encloses a small torpedo boat. When not in use the boat is kept snugly housed in its dock, an iron gate preventing the entrance of water; but, when an attack is to be made, steam is gotten up on the torpedo-boat and when ready the gate of the dock is opened, the water rushes in and floats the boat; then the latter suddenly emerges, apparently from beneath the ship, and darts upon the enemy. The practical value of these docks, however, might well be doubted; in fact, I have been informed that they have been recently closed and diverted to other purposes than those for which they were originally intended.

The British squadron consisted of the Alexandra, the flagship of the vice admiral, the Duke of Edinburgh; the Thunderer, Agamemnon, Colossus, Phaeton, Surprise, Fearless, Active, Calypso, Rover and Volage. The last named four vessels comprise the British training squadron for the instruction of enlisted boys; the seven other ships form the Mediterranean squadron, under the command of the Duke of Edinburgh.

Of the English squadron the Thunderer Colossus, Agamemnon and Alexandra are probably the most efficient fighting ships. The flagship Alexandra is, however, another type of vessel than the other three. She is an armored, broadside ship, 325 feet long, 64 feet wide, and carries a crew of 350 men. She has twin screws, a displacement of 9,490 tons, an indicated horse-power of 8,610, and has attained a speed of 14 knots per hour. The hull is protected by iron armor varying from 9 inches to 12 inches in thickness. She is provided with electric search lights. Her battery consists of two 25-ton, and ten 18-ton, muzzle loading Armstrong rifles; six 6-inch breech loading rifles; four light guns of 3-inch caliber, and eighteen machine guns of the Hotchkiss, Gardner and Nordenfelt patterns.

The Thunderer is a ship of the armored turret class. She is 285 feet long, 62 feet wide, has a displacement of 9,330 tons, and an indicated horse power of 6,270. The complement of men is 356. She has twin screws, electric search lights, and attains a speed of 13 knots. The armament consists of two 38-ton and two 35-ton muzzle loading Armstrong rifles mounted in turrets on the upper deck, and a secondary battery of quick-firing single shot guns and twelve machine guns. She carries two small torpedo-boats, with their supply of torpedoes, and has two launching tubes for discharging her torpedoes. The turrets enclosing the heavy guns are of iron 12 inches thick, and the ship's sides are protected by 12-inch armor.

The Colossus, also a ship of the turret class, is 325 feet in length and 68 feet wide. She is armed with four 45-ton breech loading Armstrong rifles, mounted in her turrets, and has a secondary battery of five 6-inch breech loading rifles, and nineteen machine guns and quick-firing single shot guns. There are two tubes for discharging torpedoes. She is lighted throughout by electricity, has electric search lights, and carries a crew of 396 men. Her speed is about 15 knots. The armor protection is 14 to 18 inches on the ship's sides and 10 to 6 inches on her turrets.

The Agamemnon, the fourth of these formidable ironclads, is somewhat similar to the Colossus in her construction, but is considerably smaller than the latter vessel. Her displacement is 8,510 tons; horse-power, 6,360; speed, 13 knots; and complement of men, 385. She is armed with four 38-ton muzzle loading rifles, mounted in her turrets on the upper deck; two 6-inch breech loading rifles; 13 machine guns, and six rapid-firing guns. The armor is 15 to 8 inches on the ship's sides, and 12 to 6 on her turrets. There are two tubes for discharging torpedoes.

The French squadron consisted of fifteen vessels, viz., the Colbert, Duperre, Courbet, Devastation, Incomparable, Milan, Condor, Faucon, Couleuvrine, Redoubtable, Chanzy, Cuny, Bailly, Derouleede and Boudart de Lagree. Five of these vessels are armour-clads, and the remainder of the squadron was made up of gunboats, torpedo-cruisers and seagoing torpedo-boats.

The Courbet, Devastation and Redoubtable are nearly, if not exactly, similar in their construction and armament, though differing slightly in their displacement. The largest of these three ships—though not the largest in the French squadron—is the Devastation, a "central battery," barbette vessel of 9,700 tons displacement. She is 332 feet in length, 67 feet wide, and carries a crew of 680 men. The indicated horse-power is 8,000, and her speed about 14 knots. Her battery consists of four 48-ton breech loading rifles, mounted in casemates on the second (or gun) deck; four 23-ton breech loaders, mounted in barbettes on the upper deck, and six 3-ton breech loaders, in broadside, also on the upper deck. There are four tubes for discharging torpedoes, and twelve Hotchkiss revolving cannon. The armour ranges from 9½ to 15 inches.

The largest ship of the French squadron is the Amiral Duperre. This vessel has a displacement of 11,200 tons, is 331 feet long, 62 feet wide, has an indicated horse power of 5783 with natural draught, or 8000 with forced draught, and is manned by a crew of 850 men. She has twin screws, and electric lights, both for interior illumination and for lighting up the surrounding waters at night. Her speed is about 16 knots per hour. The battery is composed of four 48-ton breech loading rifles, in barbettes on the upper deck; fourteen 3-ton breech loaders, and twelve Hotchkiss revolving cannon. There are six tubes for discharging torpedoes. The four heavy guns mounted in barbettes are placed upon turn-tables, revolved by hydraulic machinery, and are protected by 15½ inches of armor. The side armor of the ship is 2 inches. Above the water line the sides of the vessel "tumble home," so that the width of the upper deck is nearly eight feet less than that of the deck next below it, thus giving the ship a somewhat peculiar, but very stable, appearance.

Another formidable French ironclad is the Incomparable. She is 278 feet long; 69 feet wide; has a displacement of 7,768 tons, and an indicated horse power of 5,000. She has a ram bow—as in fact have nearly all the French ships, has a speed of about 15 knots per hour, and carries a crew of 390 men. The Incomparable is armed with the heaviest guns in the French squadron. Her battery consists of two 75-ton breech loading rifles, mounted in barbettes, one gun near the forward and the other near the after end of the vessel; four 10 centimetre breech loading rifles and four machine guns. The barbettes, in which the 75-ton guns are placed, are protected by 17½ inches of armour. The guns themselves are mounted upon turn-tables like those of the Duperre, and the gunners are sheltered by bullet proof steel shields covering the guns. The armour on the sides of the ship is 20 inches in thickness.

There were twenty-three other vessels of war here, that have not yet been mentioned, representing the navies of Austria, Germany, Holland, Russia, Portugal, Spain and the United States. Some of these ships were large ironclads, but none of very modern construction, and none that could compare in efficiency and power with those already described. But, while this is true with regard to the ironclads, it is not the case with regard to some of the smaller vessels of at least one of the European countries above named.

The new steel cruiser Reina Regente and the torpedo-catcher Destructor, belonging to the navy of Spain, are unsurpassed by any vessels of their class in the world. The Reina Regente, completed in October of last year, has not yet been provided with her battery. On her trial trip she developed a speed of 20 7-10 knots per hour, and an indicated horse power of [illegible]000. She is built of thin steel; has twin-screws; is 330 feet long, 50 feet 6 inches wide, and has a displacement of 7,500 tons. Over the boilers and engines extends a curved steel deck 3½ inches thick, but the sides of the vessel are entirely unarmored. She has a double bottom; is divided into 173 water-tight compartments, and is provided with powerful electric search lights. Her guns will be mounted on the upper deck and are to consist of four 2 centimetre, Hontoria rifles; two mounted forward and two aft; six 2-centimetre Hontoria rifles in broadside; eight Nordenfelt rapid-firing guns, and eight machine-guns, of the Hotchkiss and Gatling patterns. All the large guns will be covered with bullet-proof shields for the protection of the crew. There are five tubes for discharging torpedoes.

The Destructor, also one of the latest additions to the Spanish navy, is of the class known as "torpedo-catchers," so named from the fact that they are designed to operate against the still smaller craft called "torpedo-boats." The greater size and relatively greater engine power of the former are intended to enable them to overtake and destroy the latter. The Destructor is built of thin steel, is 192½ feet long; 25 feet wide; has a displacement of 1,058 tons, an indicated horse-power of 3800, and has maintained in recent trial trips the remarkable speed of 22 6-10 per hour. She has twin-screws, and is subdivided into a number of water-tight compartments. Her armament consists of one 9 centimetre breech loading Hontoria gun, two Hotchkiss revolving cannon, and three discharging tubes for torpedoes.

In conclusion, a further comparison of the ordnance of the three most formidable squadrons that were represented here will not be uninteresting. Once again, the palm is carried off by the Italian ships, as will be shown by an inspection of the following table, especially prepared for this letter:

Nation.	Weight of Largest Gun on Ship.	Charge of Powder.	Weight of Projectile.	Thickness of wrought iron armour that will be pierced.
Italian	110 tons	900 lbs.	2,000 lbs.	33.7 inch.
Fleet.	100 tons	725 lbs.	2,000 lbs.	32.8 inch.
French	75 tons	—	1,984 lbs.	29.4 inch.
Fleet.	48 tons	—	725.9 lbs.	23.5 inch.
English	38 tons	295 lbs.	714 lbs.	22.5 inch.
Fleet.	38 tons	210 lbs.	800 lbs.	18.1 inch.

Must be borne in mind however that the disparity in weight and penetrative power in favor of the guns of the Italian ships, as indicated in the above table, would be greatly reduced by the much larger number of guns that are carried by both the French and the English squadron.

Indignant Bostonians.

BOSTON, July 12.—Over five thousand people attended an indignation meeting called in Faneuil Hall last night to protest against the action of the school committee in excluding Swinton's history from the public schools. It is estimated that fully two thousand went away unable to get admission, Faneuil Hall could not contain another person, so densely crowded was it. In the galleries there were about 500 ladies from the back Bay, all of whom carried small silken American flags, which they waved on every occasion they could. Rev. A. A. Monroe of the Columbus Avenue Universalist church was presented. After his address, which was very conservative, the following gentlemen spoke: Rev. James Gray, Rev. Philip S. Moxon, Rev. O. P. F. Gifford, Rev. Dr. Ela and Rev. Dr. Dunn, Mr. Bruce of Tremont Temple read a series of resolutions which strongly condemned the "secret power which it was alleged controlled the schools of Boston." These resolutions also censured the practice of establishing parochial schools. When the resolutions were adopted the whole audience cheered for fully three minutes. Miss Hastings, one of the listening members of the school committee, made a long address in which she censured the committee, and declared that Boston was now wholly under Catholic rule. Rev. Dr. Moxon attempted to defend the attitude of Dr. Duryea, who has indorsed the action of the committee in an open letter. When the name of Dr. Duryea was mentioned every one in the house hissed and hooted. It was a very earnest meeting, and from all appearances the religious conflict will be kept up and fought from now on until the city election next December.

The Deep Water Convention.

FORT WORTH, Texas, July 12.—The Texas deep water convention organized permanently yesterday by electing General R. A. Cameron of Colorado president and T. G. Burney of Texas secretary. Congress was asked to appropriate not less than five million dollars for a Texas deep water port, to be expended at the point decided by the board of government engineers to be most available.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

SOME INTERESTING POINTS ABOUT THE LORILLARDS.

A Romance of Which the Hurrying World Knows Nothing—The Terribly Hot Weather of June in the Big Overgrown Metropolis.

Special Correspondence.

NEW YORK, July 2.—An old New Yorker—a great grandmother in Israel, whose memory goes back to the time when dugouts were used as ferry boats on our rivers, Canal street was covered by a bridge and the boys bobbed for eels along its muddy banks; when on the site of the Fifth Avenue hotel stood a country road house, and Central park was a long drive beyond the city limits—said to me the other day while passing one of the immense establishments of the Lorillards: "Who would have thought that snuff bought it?"

"Yes," she continued, "a little more than a century ago the first Lorillards came to New York, poor, uneducated and unknown. The head of the family kept a little shop in the neighborhood of Peck slip and Water street, and there the first American snuff was made in a Dutch coffee mill, held on the lap by one hand while a female member of the household turned the crank with the other. This was the germ of the vast enterprises that have succeeded; and, in the same manner that the brand of a favorite cigarette is nowadays the passport to its popularity, Lorillard's snuff became famous among the old stock of people whose nasal bliss depended upon its seductive titillation. The family made a prime article, undersold the importers whose goods were subject to heavy duties, and soon reaped a rich harvest. Close attention to the shop, frugal manner of living, a scorn for superfluous apartments and a careful husbanding of the small coin, soon enabled the old people to enlarge their quarters, purchase some real estate and send the children to school. John Jacob Astor was plodding along in a similar field, not far from the same neighborhood."

"Old Peter" Lorillard, as he was called to designate him from his son and namesake, although penurious, was in his day considered unerring authority on the subject of investments. "Young Peter," however, was not so parsimonious, but even when advanced in years, perhaps as a matter of habit as well as in deference to the teachings of his father, lived plainly and indulged in but few luxuries.

It was intended that the grandson should bear the family name, but the word by this time had grown too refined for "society" to tolerate the honest old sound of "Peter," and so they changed it into French, and the boy was dubbed "Pierre." But with it came another change. In Pierre all trace of penuriousness disappeared from the Lorillard family. He lived like a prince. Money to him was something to spend, not to hoard. He kept fast horses, helped the poor, hated cheats and cheating, was generous to the extent of prodigality; would leave $5 in a barber shop where twenty-five cents would have sufficed, and in numerous ways illustrated the fact that he carried a big heart on the right side of his shirt buttons. And everybody liked him.

"It is estimated that the family estate is now worth upwards of one hundred millions of dollars; the income from the tobacco business alone amounting to several millions of dollars annually. Turning from the palatial residences of the family today to the humble little shop, meagerly furnished and swarming with children, all embryo millionaires, what a contrast! Then, while others talked of their Raphaels, Corregios and stuff,

Peter shifted his trumper and only took snuff.

Now, it is only necessary for one of Peter's descendants to take snuff and the rest of the beau monde sneeze. FRANK DE FONTAINE.

I have private information of a little semi-tragedy, of which the general public will never know.

In the upper room of a handsome house in Madison avenue a girl lives behind bolts and bars. She cannot be permitted to leave the house because she is bent on following an actor about the city. He is, of course, one of the beauty men of the profession and very much married—I forget how often.

With this gentleman the girl, a delicate young lady with honeyed propensities, is romantically infatuated.

She is only desirous of feasting her eyes upon him, and has created a sensation at the theater several times by her long drawn sighs. If anything of an unpleasant nature happens to be in his role she faints. All this might not necessitate locking her up, but she will follow him about to restaurants and sit where she can see him and trot at his heels up Broadway, and she has interviewed his hair dresser and besought "a little snip" of his curly hair.

All this is ludicrous to us, but fancy one's own daughter so exploiting herself.

As soon as possible she will be taken to Europe, though she has threatened to drown herself on the way.

Her mother, a sensible and charming woman, is in despair.

An anonymous letter, said to be written by the actor himself, first revealed the facts of the girl's conduct to her parents.

There are many school girls who know all the actors by sight and flirt with them outrageously, but this is the most desperate case on record. MARY KYLE DALLAS.

June has passed, and if the latter portion of it is to be considered a prognostication of what the summer will be, God save the poor who cannot get away, and must needs suffer in the crowded tenement houses which go to swell the death rate in extremes of weather. For several days during the heated term the signal man on top of the Equitable building predicted a cool wave from the west. Every day it grew hotter. There is something irritating in passing a thermometer marking 101 degs. in the shade, and having some government official a hundred and fifty feet in the air, with delightful breezes floating past him, insisting that the highest record for the day was only 98 degs.

The death rate increased seriously during the hot week, and when we consider that those who inhabit the better class of dwellings were out of town, and the figures are made largely from the poorer classes, we may imagine possibly the sufferings of those who live in the tenements. The unequal division of wealth and its consequent, at least apparent, injustice, is evident from the fact that during the hot week people were dying in the overcrowded tenements, while hundreds of residences were shut up empty, their owners being in the country.

Those New Yorkers who can do so mostly go to the New England coast. The Long Island and New Jersey coasts are plagued with muscuitoes, while in Massachusetts and New Hampshire there is an absence of this pestiferous insect, and a more northerly, cooler climate. Still Long Branch on the southwest and the Long Island beaches on the northeast claim a large number of New Yorkers. The Adirondacks is the favorite among those who prefer inland and highland regions. F. A. MITCHEL.

BOARD OF TRADE.

Proposition Submitted by the Colorado Meteorological Association.

Some Important Matters Concerning County Roads Discussed.

Delegate Elected to Attend the Deep Water Convention.

Notwithstanding the fact that the regular meeting of the board of trade on the sixth had been duly announced, some difficulty was experienced in securing a quorum, and it was after half past eight o'clock when the meeting was called to order by President J. H. Barrick.

In the absence of the secretary Mr. George R. Buckman was elected secretary pro tem.

Mr. Buckman then read the following proposition from the Colorado State Meteorological association:

The Colorado Meteorological association proposes to increase the size of its monthly bulletin from six to eight pages of reading matter and tables, and to insert eight pages of advertisements. The new reading matter will include popular articles, some of which have been already promised by leading physicians, on subjects bearing upon the value of Colorado as a health resort. Descriptive articles relating to particular places may also be inserted as well as articles of a popular character on scientific subjects. The circulation is to be increased to 2,500, and the publication is to be distributed in every part of Colorado, and also to various classes of persons in the eastern states and in Europe. Many leading physicians in all parts of the United States already receive the bulletin regularly. The list will be extended to include every physician of any prominence whose name can be got by the director. Scientific societies, all medical journals, public libraries, etc., etc., will be supplied. It is evident that in this way the publication will become an advertising medium of importance, reaching a wide circulation in the state, and also among those who are thinking of selecting a home here. The advertisements are to be put at rates as low as will cover the expense of the proposed issue.

This proposition met with the hearty approval of the members present.

Dr. S. E. Solly spoke of the benefits which would be derived if accurate data regarding the climate of Colorado, and particularly Colorado Springs, could be placed before the public in a comprehensive and complete manner. He thought that the proposition of the Meteorological association should be favorably considered by the board.

It was moved and carried that the board of trade should insert a half page advertisement for one year at a cost of $50, and should also subscribe for fifty copies of the paper at 50 cents each per year.

The president brought before the board the question of sending a delegate to represent the city in the deep water convention to be held at Fort Worth, Texas, on the 9th inst. He stated that in his opinion the city would be extensively and favorably advertised if it had a representative in the convention.

On motion of Dr. W. J. Bartlett, Mr. Geo. R. Buckman, chairman of the advertising committee, was appointed to represent the city on that occasion.

The secretary then read an engineering communication from Professor George E. Stone of Colorado college regarding a public thoroughfare from this city to the northern and northeastern portions of the county. Professor Stone alluded to the increasing settlement of the county and the present inadequate road facilities. He urged the necessity for a public highway from Colorado Springs to Eastonville which should be both direct and of easy grade. Professor Stone asked that the board should give the matter its earliest attention and hearty support.

Dr. W. J. Bartlett thought that the question of good county roads was one in which every business man should be deeply interested.

Mr. L. F. Gowdy stated that Monument and Fountain received the benefits of a large country trade, which could be diverted to and controlled by Colorado Springs if there were good and direct county roads.

On motion the matter was referred to the committee on city and county improvements to report at the next meeting. The committee were also empowered to solicit signatures to a petition for the new road if in their judgment they should deem it advisable.

The question of opening the proposed Loan Art exhibition in aid of the Bellevue Sanitarium on Sunday was discussed, but no action was taken.

Mr. George R. Buckman, the chairman of the advertising committee, reported that 25,000 copies of a small folder, prepared by the committee and devoted to the interests of Colorado Springs and Manitou, had been circulated by the several railroads interested in the business of this locality, and that very good results were being obtained in the way of numerous inquiries.

The meeting then adjourned.

Humane Society in El Paso.

At the meeting of the board of directors of the El Paso county branch of the Colorado Humane society, the following officers were elected: President, the Hon. E. A. Colburn; vice president, Mrs. F. B. [illegible]; secretary, Mr. F. B. [illegible]; treasurer, Mr. Geo. R. Buckman. The directors are Mrs. Hamp, Mrs. John Curr, Mrs. Duncan Bell, Miss Touzalin and Mr. B. W. Steele. Sheriff Leonard Jackson was elected agent.

The dues are two dollars per annum for active members, fifty dollars for honorary members and one hundred dollars for life members. The society has already begun active work. An important case is now being considered, of which further notice will be given hereafter. The active members are expected to take a personal interest in securing the punishment of those who violate the law. As a matter of interest to those who may be fined and also to the members of this society, we publish the law of Colorado on this subject.

If any person shall overdrive, overload, torture, torment, deprive of necessary sustenance or unnecessarily or cruelly beat, or needlessly mutilate or kill, or cause or procure to be overdriven, overheated, tortured or tormented, or deprived of necessary sustenance or to be unnecessarily or cruelly beaten, or needlessly mutilated or killed, as aforesaid, any living creature, every offender shall be punished by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year or by fine not exceeding two hundred and fifty ($250) dollars, or by both, such fine and imprisonment.

An officer, agent or member of the humane society may interfere to prevent any act of cruelty, and may use force as may be necessary to prevent the same, and to that end may summon to his aid any bystander.

It will be noticed that not only the officers or agents but every member of the society has the right to interfere to prevent any act of cruelty, and may even use force.

Over one hundred members have already joined this organization. As it has been impossible to personally solicit everyone to become a member, a general invitation to join, therefore, is given to all feeling any interest in the object of this society, which is the protection of women and children and the prevention of cruelty to animals.

County Superintendent Berrey has apportioned the general school fund of 1888 among the various districts of the county. The fund this year amounts to $8,255, and each district is entitled to $37 for every pupil. On this basis the following apportionment of the fund has been made:

The county commissioners have received the report of County Surveyor [illegible] concerning the Pike's Peak road, which he was ordered to inspect as far as completed. Mr. Reid reports that the road has been constructed in a very workmanlike manner. The commissioners then agreed upon the rates of toll to be collected, which appear in another column this morning. The remainder of the day was passed in the examination of tax schedules. The following is a list of the bills allowed on Friday of last week:

Gazette Printing company, printing	$116 85
J. W. Van Meter, constable fees	4 00
El Paso Electric company, light	3 20
G. H. Stover, merchandise	4 90
A. H. Corman, justice fees	6 10
George Sink, services	20 00
J. A. Herndon, witness fees	2 50
Len Jackson, sheriff's fees	270 50
W. S. Nichols & Co., merchandise	166 76
W. M. Strickler, county physician fees	223 20

Mr. William F. Moses, of Streator, Ill., general manager and vice president of the Streator Glass Works company, arrived in the city last week and is stopping at The Antlers. Mr. Moses is considering the matter of building a large bottle and glass factory in the vicinity of Colorado City and has come to look the ground over. The erection of such a plant will be an expensive one, costing in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Washington Camp, P. O. S. of A., elected the following officers at its meeting last week: President, R. B. Taylor; vice-president, F. J. Steinmetz; master of forms and ceremonies, Frank Hall; conductor, L. O. Read; inside guard, C. S. Taylor; outside guard, Wm. Dodge. Delegates to the state encampment, Dr. F. G. Horn, C. L. Gillingham, R. B. Taylor, George F. Green. Alternates, F. J. Steinmetz, W. E. McLain, L. O. Read, S. T. Pullin. These officers will be installed next Monday evening.

Dr. [illegible] Christopher, who resided in this city about a year ago, has returned from Kansas City and will locate here permanently. He has rented a house on North Nevada avenue and will soon engage in the practice of his profession.

Mr. [illegible] Bowman has secured enough funds to buy the Fireman's band for a series of summer concerts in the north and south parks two evenings each week. He is now endeavoring to make some arrangement with the electric light and gas companies for furnishing light for the band stands.

RUMORS OF WARS.

Prof. E. A. Freeman Writes on the European Situation.

OXFORD, June 27, 1888.

The readers of the English newspapers have every morning the privilege of studying paragraphs on "The European Situation," which are supposed to lead them to the latest and most trustworthy news from all parts of the eastern continent. For the most part these sources of knowledge give us the opportunity of practicing that precept of the gospel which bids us not to be troubled when we hear of wars and rumors of wars. There is no wiser precept from one end of the Bible to the other. The rumors of wars are in some sort worse than the wars themselves. They accustom men's minds to the notion of war as a thing that must come before long, with or without reason. The thing must be; we cannot hinder it, so there is nothing to do but to talk about it before and. Now truly most of us can do very little towards hindering a war, a good deal less than any one of us can do towards bringing a war about. But this vague talking on the subject of possible wars does mischief in another way. It genders a liking to the spread of false rumors. In real war time the newspaper correspondent has always something to say, and that is needed. What is wanted is that he should say it truthfully and straightforwardly, not spending too much time in fine writing or in telling us what he imagines Italians and Russians, and what great personages intended to do. But in rumor of war time, as distinguished from real war time, the correspondent very often has nothing to say; yet he feels it right to his employers as a well informed person to say something. So he writes or telegraphs something vague, something which really means nothing whatever, but which has the air of being sent by one who knows more than other people. Some powerful personage has had a talk with another powerful personage, that is a certain people and others. Nobody knows what the two really said to one another, but the field for guessing is boundless. To telegraph a guess one day and to telegraph the next day that it is unfounded at least leads to quite another number of lines. Then something can always be said about "situations" and "tensions" and "attitudes" and "impressions." Something has been "satisfactory" or "disquieting" in some kind of "circles." There are "political circles," "diplomatic circles," "well informed circles." This very easy, and now and perhaps more promising class has been added, "non-parliamentary circles." It is wonderful how all these things, specially the "impressions," always happen in "circles," one is tempted to think that is because those who report them know no way of reasoning except in a circle. Now one knows very well what all these technical terms of the correspondents really come to. "Situations" and "tensions" and "impressions" and "attitudes" all come under that class of words which simple people are silly enough to use because they think they sound fine, and which cunning people are clever enough to use, sometimes to hide their meaning, sometimes to hide the fact that they have just then no meaning. When we have heard about the "tension" and the "complication" and "the strained relations," we have in no way added to our stock of facts. As for "attitudes," the queerest thing ever done in them was about a dozen years back, when Lord Derby wrote to the prince of Montenegro to "preserve a prudent attitude." To those who ever saw the prince of Montenegro or any other Montenegrin the words suggested the grotesque picture of a tall, upright, stalwart figure, in the most picturesque of warlike costumes, putting itself into this queer posture and that, with Lord Derby standing by as dancing master.

Now all this stuff is telegraphed daily because the Anglo-Saxon public will have foreign news, and because those who take on themselves to send it in news, sometimes cannot, sometimes will not, send it anything better. There is, to be sure, that great personage at Paris, who, at a great cost one would think, daily presses the lightning into his service, to enlighten us in this and with his views on all things in heaven and earth. I was hard on him the other day when some clever fellow described him as being a great comic actor without knowing it. But as for interviews between powerful personages, who does not remember the interviews between two specially powerful personages, the grand Turk and the grand correspondent? That interview at least was not left to be a subject of vague surmises, it was reported in full, down to the uttermost jot and tittle. On only one point no one seemed to think, as the two powerful personages spoke through an interpreter, might be that neither of them heard a word of what the other meant him to hear. Then there is the less famous teacher of manners who uses the wire daily from Vienna. It is said that his mere personality was changed not long ago, but, if so, the tradition remains unbroken; Amurath has succeeded to Amurath. One really admires the skill with which, year after year, the British public is made to swallow, by way of news from the Austrian capital, statements which convey no fact whatever. Stirring events are often going on in those parts, and the British public is never allowed to hear a word about them. It is quite possible that the correspondent at Vienna who sends the telegrams never hears of them; one may be sure that in "diplomatic circles," in "well informed circles," the chief things that happen are never spoken of. In the "diplomatic circles" they are doubtless perfectly well known; but it is understood that they are not to be talked about; the "well informed circles" are, we may suspect, so well informed as never to hear anything about such small matters. There was a touch of the writing, a touch of the "grand style," the other day about "the nations reposing under the benificent sceptre of the Emperor Francis Joseph." One cannot swear to the exact words; but it was something very like that. After that it would never do to say the world knew that the repose of the nations is sometimes rather broken, that there sometimes are "tensions" and "complications" and "strained relations," not only between the commoners and the nations which go to make it up. It would not do to tell the Anglo-Saxon public that the nations sometimes put themselves into "attitudes" which no well informed circle is likely to hear of, "attitudes" of which Lord Derby, if he heard of them, would certainly write to say that they were not at all prudent. It would be too long ago to look back, but one would be well pleased to know whether any English paper contained any record of a memorable day about thirteen years ago when the so called King of Dalmatia and Duke of Ragusa visited the ancient city, once the free merchant commonwealth, not short of argosies. Were "well informed circles" ever to allow the people of Ragusa too patriotic to accept their foreign master, too high minded to insult him, a owed him to pass along their wide Stradone in perfect silence, and now it is said that the orders of so many kingdoms, duchies, counties and lordships burst into tears at a reception such as he had never before come across in any of them? But sometimes things are done which go beyond the receiving of a foreign king in silence by a city which a crying wrong has made part of his dominions. Deeds sometimes happen which more nearly recall the treatment which foreign kings have in earlier times met with at the hands of those whom they looked on as their subjects. One would give a good bit to know what the well informed circles in their several ages thought of the attitudes of Julius Caesar, of William Wallace and of the Maid of Orleans. We know what such circles thought of the attitudes of Constantine Xanares and Giuseppe Garibaldi in later times. How many English speaking people ever heard of the two wars in Crivoscia in 1865 and in 1882? How many people ever heard that there is such a land as Crivoscia at all? The correspondent who moves in well informed circles either never heard of them himself or takes care that other people should not hear of them. I must at this stage become personal, and say that, not once or twice but rather nearer to the scene of action than this is, of Britain, I should never have heard of them myself. The impression made by the Crivoscian war of 1865 must have been anything but satisfactory in well informed circles, tensions and complications were greatly strained, at least the people of Crivoscia put themselves into an attitude so imprudent—or so prudent—that they thoroughly beat the troops of the imperial, royal, and apostolic person who called himself their sovereign, and under whose benificent sceptre they ought to have been peacefully reposing, sent against them to deprive them of their ancient rights. So inconvenient a fact had to be hushed up, and I can personally witness that in really well informed circles in this land it was never heard of. The second war in 1882 had another ending. The imperial, royal and apostolic personage had the satisfaction, not of defeating the Crivoscian people, but of occupying their empty territory after they had themselves withdrawn to hospitable Montenegro. Now, as long as there was any chance of things turning out otherwise, the British public was not allowed to know anything about the matter, when things had reached such a stage as to make a good impression in well informed circles—that phrase always means that some blow has been dealt against the freedom of some nation or other—the matter changed. Then the correspondent did vouchsafe a cautious allusion to the suppression of an insurrection which nobody in England or America who knew of such matters only through the correspondent could possibly have understood.

This is the universal rule. It possible, a popular movement is not to be spoken of at all; if it is impossible to avoid mentioning it, then it is to be called names. It is an "agitation," a "revolutionary" agitation, a "seditious" agitation, any word that will make a good impression in well informed circles. When the agitation, the revolution, the conspiracy, takes the opposite shape, when it takes the shape of a despot plotting against the plighted rights of any people, there are no hard words then. Conspiracies and agitations of that kind are just the kind of things which well informed circles hear of with satisfaction, except of course when the despot gets thoroughly beaten, as in the first invasion of Crivoscia. Now the Croatians were abused the other day, and the Bohemians sometimes come in for a share. And just at this moment something is going on in Herzegovina, the conquered and which, if one wants to make a good impression in well-informed circles, it is said that one ought to call "Neu-Oesterreich." What is going on nobody knows, except those who are actually there to see. The people of Herzegovina do sometimes rise against oppressors. They have gone now risen against the Turks, and they may possibly be rising against the Austrians. And, stranger than all, when they do rise, their independent aims are thwarted from them by one of the silly artificial boundaries in which diplomatists rejoice, and we always hear a way of coming to help them. Perhaps they are doing so again. Nobody really knows, but nobody outside well informed circles will be satisfied with the correspondent's account that the Prince of Montenegro has been sending "brigands" into Herzegovina. There is no easier word to use than that of "brigands," and there is none that is more effective. Only let us stop a minute and remember that there was a stage of the Latin language when latro and miles meant the same thing. The correspondent preaches an early sermon to the Prince of Montenegro on the wickedness of sending "brigands" into Herzegovina. What the poor man should turn about and preach the same sermon to that other prince who sent—we will not say "brigands," but attorneys to encourage a work in Crivoscia the exact opposite to that which it is to be supposed that the "brigands" are sent to do in Herzegovina.

EDWARD A. FREEMAN.

Professor of History at the University.

The men in the northeast portion of the county are greatly pleased that the board of trade has taken up the matter of a new county road running from this city to Eastonville. Many of them however think that the present road is as direct as it could be made, but it is hard in places. There is only one heavy piece on the road which they claim can be removed by sufficient grading. This one piece seems to be the main obstacle to a road directly east, with a branch running to Grangerville. A farmer man stated recently that there had been more travel to Grangerville and Eastonville this year than in the previous ten years.

Miss Mary Dean, the teacher of the Manitou Park school, has furnished us with the following report for the month of June. Names of those neither absent nor tardy—Willie Washington, Elmer and Willie Wilcox. Names of pupils not absent—Josie Burnside, Gertie and Cora Baldwin, Lottie Brown, Stella, Logan and Cora Smith. Names of pupils making highest number of read marks—Alice Glass, Clarence Browning, Glass, Cora Baldwin, Elmer Wilcox.

Prof. G. N. Mallon of Colorado college, who has been attending to the interests of the institution in the east, has returned home from Boston. He reports the finances of the college to be in a very flattering condition.

Workmen are now engaged in erecting a small observation to the left of the hotel on the eastern side of the building. The lower floor will be an enlargement of the sitting room while the second story will be used for lookout purposes.

All the school districts in the county have sent in the results of their annual school census. The census shows that the total school population of the county is 29,0[illegible], an increase of 557 over that of 1887.

The following schools in the county are now holding summer sessions: Summit Park, Manitou Park, Dayton Divide, Morrisant, Four Mile, Kittredge, Bluff school at Eastonville, Table Rock District, Gwillimville, Granger and District No. 23 north of Monument.

A special meeting of the fire department has been called for Wednesday evening, July 25th, to elect a chief to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. A. G. Draper, the present incumbent.

The committee on finance and sewerage have secured the right of way on the sewerage ditch through all the property outside of the city limits through which the ditch passes.

Small straws show which way the wind blows. At a vote taken for president at Manitou Park on July 1st Cleveland received 2, Harrison 6 and Fisk 1 from opposition.

Rev. [illegible] Gregg, pastor of the Congregational church, has leased a cottage at Glen Park, and will occupy it for the remainder of the summer with his family.

Mr. A. Stump, of Colorado City, advertises that he has a large number of burros for sale, ranging in price from $15 to $30.

The ladies of St. Ann's Catholic church will realize about $500 from the proceeds of their excursion to Green Mountain Falls on the Fourth.

The contract for the new Congregational church building has been drawn up, and was ready for signatures on Monday.

A plat of Hewett's addition to the city has been filed in the county clerk's office.

Mr. G. W. Musser has been re-elected principal of the Monument public school.

Dockstader's minstrels will appear in the opera house in the course of the next two weeks.

Mr. E. E. Martin and Mrs. Mary Taylor, of this city, were married in Chicago last week.

Charles Meyer, who formerly conducted a bakery at Colorado City, has been bound over to the district court in the sum of $500 bail, on the charge of starting the conflagration which nearly destroyed the town of El Moro. While at Colorado City Meyer's bakery was a most down by dynamite. He was generally regarded as a suspicious character.

On Monday County Superintendent of Schools Berrey received the notice of the regular semi annual apportionment for this county of the state school fund. This apportionment is made in July and January. The amounts given to this county this year are $2,29 89 in January, and $3,112 50 in July, last year they were $82 09 in January and $635 52 in July.

Messrs. Booy & Doty, the North End photographers, make an exhibit of some very fine portraits in their display window.

Wool Markets.

Sherman [illegible] & Co. of Chicago, in their last wool circular state that for the past week the wool market has been active with the strong advance on bright medium wools of the previous week firmly established. The demand was large and about equally divided between dark and bright wools. The sales for the week are large amounting to fully 2,000,000 pounds, mostly bright wools, but there was a large proportion of dark wools and quite a good size lot of coarse fine wool. The bulk of the sales of bright wools are of the medium grades, which brought 23@25 cents, and medium wools of all classes have very heavy sales. Kansas, Nebraska and similar wools are now being received in considerable quantities and sales of good size are coming. The clip in the country are beginning to move with more freedom, but in many cases concessions in price have to be made by the seller to effect the sale. Manufacturers are operating with more freedom and in some instances are anticipating their wants of the very near future. Indications point to a steady even trade this coming week, with only a slight chance for an advance in price.

The following quotations on Colorado wools are given:

	Average	Choice
Fine unimproved	14@16	17@20
Medium do	15@18	18@22
Coarse	14@17	17@21
Carpet	11@13	13@ 6

READY FOR TRAVEL.

The Pike's Peak Toll Road Opened to the Public.

The Road to be Fully Completed Within Three Weeks.

A Ride Furnishing Beautiful Scenery Without Any Discomforts.

Rates of Toll Established by the County Commissioners.

By the first of August the toll road to the summit of Pike's Peak will be completed. This announcement, coupled with the fact that the road is the most thoroughly constructed of any similar thoroughfare in the west, will be received with pleasure by many who have waited for this opportunity to ascend the Monarch of the Rockies. While the trains to the summit have all been well manned and kept in good repair, yet the advantages of a well constructed carriage road are so obvious that as soon as it is known to the public a great increase in the number of those who will ascend the peak will follow.

The construction of this road is due to the business foresight and sagacity of the well known railroad contracting firm of Carlile, Price & McGavock. This firm not only undertook the work of constructing the road, but assumed its ownership, thus showing that it has abundant faith in the profitableness of its operation.

The route to the summit of Pike's Peak from Cascade Canon is in many respects superior to that from any other point. A uniform grade is obtained for the entire distance, and the road traverses a region of country abounding in beautiful scenery, and naturally adapted for the construction of such a drive way.

From Cascade Canon to timber line a distance of eleven miles the road bed is composed of hard gravel which, when it becomes thoroughly packed, will make it one of the best in the state.

Leaving the hotel the road pursues a devious course, in order to reach the summit of the western ridge of Cascade canon. For about two miles it passes through a dense pine forest which line the road on both sides. By means of numerous zigzags, or to use a nautical expression, tacks, the traveler finally finds himself almost on the summit of the rocky point which overlooks Cascade and which gives him one of the finest views on the route. To the east is the limitless expanse of prairie dotted with the shadows of fleeting clouds. A long, green line of foliage marks the course of the fountain, while Colorado Springs and Colorado City seem almost at one's feet.

From this point onward the road hugs the mountain side until it reaches the eye of Cascade creek. After following the course of the stream for a short distance it turns towards the west, and it is here that a splendid view of the peaks is obtained. The road now ascends a little divide which forms the eastern boundary of a beautiful valley or park in which are the ranches of Messrs. Slattery, Stetson and Crews. In the valley a very steep stretch of about a mile is encountered. From the valley the road ascends to the top of a slight ridge, and then turns directly south.

In driving along this ridge there is one constantly changing view. To the northeast are the plains, while to the south is the towering peak. To the north and west one mountain peak after another can be seen all covered with their perpetual cloak of snow. The view embraces the mountains west of Denver, the Mosquito range east of Leadville and the mountains which form the western boundary of the Arkansas valley. With one grand sweep the eye takes in a view so varied and so extensive that words fall far short of describing it.

At the southern extremity of the ridge and eight miles from Cascade is the first camp of the laborers who are at work on the road. From the camp excellent views of Manitou, South Park and the plains can be obtained. The timber line is only a short distance above the camp, and the summit of the peak could be reached in an air line in less than three miles. But in order to retain the established grade, nine miles will have to be traversed by the road before the summit is gained.

On the last few miles of the road above timber line the finest and grandest views along the entire route will be encountered.

The trip must be taken in order to be appreciated, and the most complete word picture would give but a feeble idea of the beauty and grandeur of the ride.

Anticipating the desire of many persons who wish to traverse the road as far as completed, the owners a few days ago made an application to the county commissioners to establish the rates of toll. Yesterday the commissioners made the following rates which will be adhered to until the road is completed, when they will be revised:

	One way.	Round trip.
1 span 1 vehicle	$1 00	$1 75
Each additional span	75	1 25
1 horse and vehicle	75	1 25
1 saddle horse	50	75
Each pack animal	25	....
Loose stock, per head	10	....
Each bicycle or tricycle rider	35	50
Footman	35	50

At present parties wishing to go up the toll road will have to furnish their own conveyances, though there will be livery accommodations at Cascade at an early date.

The road is a perfectly safe one to travel. The grade is in no place over 10 per cent, and the average width of the roadbed is 12 feet. Abundant turnouts are provided though vehicles can pass each other at almost any place.

The route of the toll road was first surveyed by County Surveyor E. L. Reid, and in constructing it this line has been generally followed, with the exception of a few slight deviations.

When the road is finished it is estimated that the trip from Cascade to the summit and return can be made in ten hours.

EASTERN WAR CLOUDS.

Castelar Writes on Russia's Plans and Preparations for Eastern Conquest.

MADRID, June 27, 1888.

It requires but a glance at the news that comes from the Turkish empire and its bordering lands to understand the chaotic and strange confusion which prevails there at this hour.

We are all of us familiar with the descriptions of the beautiful calcareous mountain known by the name of Mount Athos, which the blue waters of the Ægean sea and the horizon of the luminous skies of Greece tint with hues and colors till it shines like a rainbow graven in stone, its slopes and ridges covered with forests of a metallic flora, and former as it were of iridescent precious stones. Saint mountains were the epithets bestowed on its abrupt and ossal proportions by the Greek and Latin writers. On top of this mountain an antique architect desired to carve the statue of Alexander, holding a city in his right hand and a raging torrent in his left; with woods for his mantle and the firmament for his diadem. A Christian tradition says it that here on the mountain tops Satan tempted the serene spirit of Christ, offering him all the dominions of the world outspread at his feet. From its summit one discerns Macedonia with her rugged and inaccessible defiles, and Thrace, the birthplace of those Eleusinian mysteries that bear so close a resemblance to the traditions of Yucatan. Fires too of Asia Minor outline in the distance, like a deep and gigantic cone comparable only to those Greek temples known in history by the name of the temples of Samothrace, the Olympus of Thessaly still inhabited by the Gods, even as in the days of Homer and the Asiatic Ida, where Jupiter was fostered, spots of ground endeared to human sight and the fascination of the poetry of whose past has given rise to so efficacious and truly human a worship.

The oriental religions, have elected these picturesque sites for monasteries, and in the midst of roaring streams and gardens that offer the sweetest figs, of the shades of resonant laurel trees and the perfumes of jasmines and orange blossoms, there tower, lightly upon the mountain crests, innumerable and many-colored domes of Greek temples, there stretch the congested lines of ancient convents, the pious and antique sanctuaries in whose chapels stand the rigid virgins of Bizarelio, and at whose portals the figures of kneeling pilgrims are discernible amid the battlements and towers, and rustes fortresses as strong by nature and means of defense.

So monastic is the character of the place that for fifteen centuries no woman has entered there. Let us, in this classical geography of Southern Europe, relate that even the females of domesticated animals are excluded, and that fresh eggs are never eaten in this fertile country, because hens are prohibited from entering. There are nine hundred and thirty five temples and churches in this mountainous territory and the whole of the inhabitants, with the exception of some few merchants, are anchorites and monks.

Being of the Greek religion, the Russians, after the tenth century flocked to the monasteries of Athos, enriching many of the same by the condition of extensive and well stocked properties. In 1870, however, the Russians expelled the administrators of this ecclesiastical property, and laid claim to the same on behalf of the crown and the state, leaving to the usufructuaries merely the usufruct of a fifth part of the estates. And even in the allotment of this fifth part, Russia took into account not the dogmas, but the nationalities professed, literally portioning out lands to such as declared themselves Russians, and noting at and pruning the shares of such as claimed to belong to other nationalities. Politics were treated like the women, and were exiled. The monks contented themselves with their six hours of prayer by day, and their four hours of prayer by night, letting wars and revolutions rage outside their theological island.

But at present all this is changed. Russia means to make herself mistress of the east at any price, and where she does not have recourse to arms, she makes use of intrigue and ruse. The Russian monks have gained, whereas the Greek monks have lost in number. At the outbreak of every fresh difficulty between the porte and Greece, difficulties of more and more frequent recurrence, the sultan threatens and strikes at Greece in favor of the Muscovites. There are one thousand Russians in the monastery of Pandeleimon, six hundred in that of Serai'on, and about three thousand in the whole of the Peninsula. You need but look at these monks, and you shall know by their air and gait, their manners and their gestures that they are a regiment of soldiers disguised in monk's clothing, much as in a well known stage play the bandits are known by their guns and the preaching devils by their cloven feet and horns. A General Sebastianoff, a man of rare power and courage, acts as head of the monastery, a number of able engineers, coarsely clad, strengthen all the chief strategical points, and trace their military plans. This mountain with her monasteries and her saints is being converted from a divine temple into a formidable and aggressive fortress, for such is the intent and purpose of Russia. And what the czar is doing on Mount Athos he is doing throughout the east.

Is it possible, in the face of such systematic action on the part of Russia, to entertain any doubts as to the deliberate designs directed against this quarter of Europe? The peoples who have been delivered from the Turkish yoke, thanks to a tremendous effort, are fearful of once again being trampled under foot by Russia, that calls herself their saviour, and with a view of freeing themselves alike from the old tyranny and the new, call in a third party and appeal for aid, now to this, now to that nation, against the Russians and the Turks; the Servians to Austria, the Roumanians to Germany and the fearless rulers of Bulgaria, so tormented in our time, to Russia and England. Hence Russian and Austrian partisans on all sides, hence intrigues and relations for the peace of Europe in every quarter.

The congress of Berlin, in assured by has broken the promises of the congresses of Vienna and Paris. The congress held in Vienna in 1815 and that held in Paris in 1855, had for object, on the one hand, to proclaim the principles of order and legitimacy, on the other hand to humanize the Turkish empire, as the treaty of Vidaranca subsequently attempted to humanize the theocracy of Roumania. Now, forsooth, this treaty of Berlin, which we may call the treaty of Bismarck and to which all the great European powers contributed, sought to create artificial dikes for Russia, diminish, without annihilating at all, now, the Turkish empire, and uplift, without exciting overmuch, the empire of Austria, but has, as a matter of fact, let loose in the east a very chaos of confusion worse confounded, interests and passions clashing with and furiously raging against one another.

Who can pretend to guess at the future of Servia, of Roumania, at what may or may not pass in the diets of the Croatians, the congresses of the Magyars, in the interior of young Bohemia, in the parliaments of Vienna? When we hope that Bratiano's fall from power may bring peace to Roumania, the telegrams inform us that disrespect has been shown to the national representatives, that the Roumanian peasants are in arms, that the life of the king is in danger. When we dare to hope that a new ministry will settle all differences in Servia, we are reminded of the divorce between the Russia-loving Queen Natalia and the Austria-loving King Milan, and that the partisans of Austria and Russia are at daggers drawn. When we had thought Prince Ferdinand accepted on all sides, Revna and Tirnova filled with a generous enthusiasm, and resolved to defend themselves against one and all, the Danube on the one side, Montenegro on the other, and lastly Servia, pour forth conspirators right and left to disturb the general security and spread alarm and misgiving on every hand.

There is no chance of any rest for Europe so long as the question of the east be not resolved in accordance with the principles of justice that ought to preside over all human relations, and bring about peace and harmony among men. Otherwise, vainly would we seek tranquility. Such monstrous organisms as the German and the Austrian empires, as the empires of Turkey and of Russia, bound to accomplish acts that are destructive of liberty and labor, remind us, to our misfortune, that we are not yet well out of the period of wars, and that we are, even if unwillingly, steering straight for a state of brute force and conquest.

How hard it is to find a truly great statesman under such conditions of society! But a little while ago it sufficed for a statesman to have the instincts of progress in order to give a forward impulse to human societies. Nowadays it too often happens that the very men whose providential mission it is to reform society find it incumbent on them, owing to the reforms already accomplished, to conserve the institutions that have been rendered necessary by revolutionary outbreaks. And, truth to say, I know of no faculties so opposite and contradictory in nature as those required by the minister who, in modern society, would at once reform and conserve.

The prophet, who, with his divining glasses, had foreseen recent events, dimly visible in the perspective of a mysterious future, finds himself constrained to drop from the giddy heights wherein his ideas moved and had their being, to come down the glorious eloquence that rose spontaneously to his lips, or fall like fertilizing rain upon the hearer, and to cramp the theories writ on the infinite tablets of his mind, that they may be made to fit into the narrow moulds of a reality as sad and dark as all real things must be when compared with the abstract archetypes of science. This adjustment, enforced by the very nature of things, and inevitable, whatever may be the social state and the progress wrought by the innovator and the apostle, constitutes a contradiction that is despicable in the eyes of the vulgar, of a generation rendered blind by the struggle of the day, but is justified and sanctioned by the serene judgment of posterity. In a word, the modern European statesman must, if he is to do lasting good, be progressive and conservative at one and the same time.

CASCADE CANON.

Arrival of a Party of Kansas Excursionists Wednesday Afternoon.

Cascade presented a very animated appearance Wednesday afternoon when a large excursion party from Kansas in charge of Mr. George J. Cook arrived in a special train composed of two day and two Pullman coaches. The train left Kansas City on Tuesday morning and a large number boarded it at Topeka and Emporia. The following is a list of the excursionists, including a number who joined the party at Pueblo and who are still at Cascade:

J. Smith, W. W. Manspeaker, D. P. Degraff and son, C. Huntoon, C. C. Cooper, Topeka; E. H. Buckwalter and wife, J. Severy and wife, F. M. Cooper, M. D., Mrs. G. M. North, Emporia; F. P. MacLennan, proprietor and editor Topeka Journal, Topeka; W. W. Miller, Osage City, Kas.; W. C. Troup, C. O. Knowles, N. S. Goss, W. R. Parsons, W. Elson, A. J. Huntoon, Topeka; G. D. Cook, Chicago; A. S. Johnson, R. Nichols, W. Norton, Topeka; G. G. Gilbert, Dodge City, Kas.; L. A. Thatcher and wife, C. L. Carr, Pueblo; C. P. Smith, Topeka; P. Forsha and wife, Hutchinson, Ks.; C. K. Holliday, B. Roberts, C. L. Shoenberger, Miss Clara Shoenberger, Miss Duryanne, Topeka; Miss Thatcher, Chicago; L. Garvey, F. W. Giles, E. G. Welch, F. Curran, R. B. McClintock, J. W. Pack, O. Bisinger, Topeka; O. F. McKinney, St. Louis; P. F. Dugan and wife, Pueblo; H. Moses and wife, C. L. Moses, Great Bend, Ks.; Mrs. A. C. Moses, A. L. Moses, Pueblo; D. Holland, New York; G. W. Dunn, N. Y. Cutchert, Denver.

In the party are Hon. F. P. MacLennan, editor and proprietor of the Topeka Evening Journal, C. K. Holliday, the oldest director of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad, and Colonel A. S. Johnson, general land commissioner of the same company.

Carriages were in waiting at the depot on the arrival of the train to convey the party around the town. No public effort was made to sell lots, though quite a number were disposed of by private sale. Several of the excursionists had already purchased lots, and their visit at this time is for the purpose of selecting them.

Mr. Cook, who has charge of the party, is a member of Cook's celebrated excursion bureau, and a large stockholder in the Cascade Town and Improvement company. Next week he will bring a party to Colorado exclusively composed of Chicago business men. The party will visit Cascade and remain there two or three days.

In the evening a very enjoyable hop was given at the Cascade house in honor of the visitors now at the resort. The Colorado Midland officials kindly placed a special train at the disposal of a large number of invited guests from this city, who desired to attend the hop. The train left the union depot at half-past seven o'clock, and arrived at Cascade at a quarter past eight. Among the guests from this city were the following officials of the Midland: President John Scott, Second Vice President G. C. Allen, Treasurer C. E. Noble, General Manager D. B. Robinson, Superintendent T. S. Saunders, General Passenger Agent C. S. Lee and General Solicitor E. T. Rogers. Accompanying them were Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Barich, Miss L. Farnham, Mrs. F. F. Hagerman, Mrs. Viola Frost-Mixer, Miss Hyatt, Mrs. E. T. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Robinson, and Messrs. Hagerman, Williams, Darlow, Godfrey, Holland, Blodgett, Chase, Robb, Bosworth and others.

Several large bonfires were brilliantly blazing when the train arrived, and the grounds were further beautified by scores of Chinese lanterns, which were suspended from numerous pine trees, and the piazzas of the hotel and cottages.

After a number of selections by Metz's orchestra of this city Mrs. Viola Frost Mixer favored the party with several vocal solos, which were rendered in a thoroughly artistic manner, and were received with evident appreciation. The accompaniments and instrumental selections by Miss Hyatt were also favorably spoken of.

The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing, and at half past ten o'clock the party returned to this city highly pleased with their evening's enjoyment.

The new city directory, published by Mr. S. N. Francis is now ready for distribution. It is the best directory of the city that has ever been compiled. It is complete in every particular, and will be invaluable as a book of reference. It has a neat typographical appearance, and is bound in a thorough and durable manner. Orders for the directory should be given to Mr. Francis at once.

Mr. C. A. Connell has sold the Harris ranch ten miles northeast of this city to The West Monument Land and Water company for $15,500.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Taylor arrived from New York Wednesday and will continue to reside in Colorado Springs permanently.

MARY JANE'S LETTER.

SHE DESCRIBES A HERDIC PARTY AT THE CAPITAL.

She Has Been Trying to Get Pictures of the Japanese Minister and His Wife. The Coreans and Their Fondness for the Washington Girls.

Special Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—I have before now referred, in my wheedlesome and winning manner, to the incipient popularity of roof riding on Herdic coaches as one of the society divertisements of the national capital on summer evenings. Well, when I wrote that I didn't think there was much in it, and there wasn't just at that very precise time, but the long hot spell developed it, as the sun does the flowers after a shower, and it became a craze. There were only five coaches with seats on top, and the way they were crowded night after night was astonishing, not to say painful, if you happened to be the one that wanted a seat among the twinkling stars. I never noticed it particular'y until Dickey and I were invited one evening to indulge in a "Herdic party," with five others, just half the seating capacity of the roof. We were to leave the point of departure at 8:30 p. m., and were there promptly, attired in palm leaf fans, the most diaphanous of garments, perspiration, and the usual other furniture incidental to the summer solstice, and thinking, of course, when we were ready for the Herdic it would be ready for us. So we went to catch it, and when it came it was full on top and empty inside. I was disturbed in my mind by this, but the hostess said it was all right, for we could ride to the end of the line, about five minutes, and then take our places on top. Half way there, a lot more people came inside, and three got off the top, and with a skirmish move three of us climbed up to be sure of a start. Then the Herdic rolled on and soon turned at the end of the line, and for a minute I thought we had run into a mob of riotous women or had caught a hired Sunday school picnic trying to get home. There were forty or more of them, all of the better class and most of them as good as we have here, and they were in for enjoying a ride on the Herdic top, and had come out there to be sure of it, just as we were going. They made a rush for the steps when the Herdic stopped, and so did we insiders, but not a living soul on top moved. They had come to stay, and they had come clear out there to the boundary, from I don't know where, to avoid taking the chances. So had the others, but they had come out inside, and with less knowledge of the rush, and after waiting an hour or more, they had to get inside of the stuffy coach and ride home again. More than half of our party did the same, and the three fortunate ones on top came down at the end of their five-minute-and-back ride, and almost cried because they had to leave the cool breezes for the hot pavements. Then, cooled with grateful ices and cheerful seltzer lemonades, we resolved ourselves into a "coorsey party," and wanted to catch an empty coach, but at 11:30 the prospect was no better than at 8:30, and I really believe that on a hot night in Washington an all night car would be crowded until breakfast time.

It is great sport, but the drivers don't like it, as they get no extra pay for driving three horses and taking care of a double complement of passengers, and they are getting even by driving their coaches under the trees and swiping people with the branches to the best of their ability. I know of several cats, male and female, that have had very damaging experiences. The poor drivers ought to be allowed to have some pleasure in life, I reckon, and as long as they do not swipe me off the roof I won't complain. I do complain, however, about climbing up the ladder to the roof. We can't get up unless the men help us, and they can't help us without being placed in such a position that they can tell the number of our shoes, and I don't want all the men of my acquaintance to know what sized shoes I wear.

So there.

I've been dealing with foreigners lately, that is, heathen foreigners, and I find they are human after all, especially the women. I think women are the humanest specimens of creation anyway. I presume it is because that, as all other creation was made out of dust, the woman was made out of a human rib, and naturally retains the characteristics of her ancestry. Anyway, I tried to get a picture of the new Japanese minister and his wife, and I couldn't do it. I kept on trying, and each time was put off, until at last I learned, as a profound secret, that the lady wasn't going to have her pictures taken until she had some American clothes to wear. That's a woman, ain't it? As long as she was in her own country, and everybody wore a certain style of dress like her own, she was satisfied, no matter what that style might look like, but as soon as she got among another lot of women in another lot of clothes heaven itself couldn't move her to appear in anything different from the fashion.

Those Corean chaps are here yet, also, but they do look dreadfully lonesome since so many of the pretty girls they doted on last winter have departed to other lands. It's funny how those pagans used to worship the pretty white priestesses, and not so very funny either, for they never had anything half so nice in their own country to worship.

* * *

Had a talk not long ago with a Chinaman of the legation on religious subjects. Or Dickey did rather, as she likes the Mongolians better than I do. He speaks very fair English and I listened.

"They say you are heathen people, you know," said Dickey with a smile, after the talk was well under way.

"Yes, yes," said Mr. Chop, also smiling.

"But I don't think you are," she continued; "indeed, I think there are just as heathen people among us as anybody in China would care to be."

"Yes, yes," smiled Mr. Chop innocently.

Dickey never let on.

"What is your idea of heaven and hell, of good and bad?" she asked next.

"Good—up; bad—down," he replied, accompanying his speech with an expressive gesture.

"Of course, certainly," said Dickey, with pious joy.

The nominations have passed, and the headquarters of national politics sits serene amid her shade and icy ices the days go by. We have politics here all the time, and we don't enthuse except under extraordinary circumstances. Everybody says the tickets are good clean tickets, and I wonder how a ticket can come out of politics and stay in politics and still be clean.

MARY JANE.

The Young Men's Republican club held a regular meeting Tuesday evening, which was well attended. The minutes of the previous regular meetings were read and approved. The executive committee reported the list of newspapers which they had secured for the use of the members of the club. The committee on membership reported the names of several persons for membership, all of whom were unanimously elected. The vacancy in the executive committee caused by the resignation of M. T. Hale, was filled by the election of Mr. E. C. McCreery. The secretary read a letter from Hon. G. Q. Richmond, of Pueblo, who stated that his business engagements would prevent him from addressing the club at an early date, but that he would be glad to appear before them later in the campaign. A motion to change the name of the club to the El Paso County Republican club was laid on the table. On motion the president was empowered to appoint a committee of five to organize a campaign club. The names of the committee will be announced in a few days. The meeting then adjourned.

A large force of men will be put to work during the next few days to do the grading for the side tracks on the Rock Island immediately west of the Denver & Rio Grande passenger depot. The Rock Island company own a strip of land 2000 feet wide extending south from the railroad bridge over the Monument. It is the intention of the company to change the course of the creek, in order to prevent washouts, and to give the necessary trackage ground. The tracks which will be laid west of the depot will be used almost exclusively for passenger traffic.

We are glad to announce that Miss Viola Frost will give a concert in the opera house some evening next week. She will be assisted on that occasion by Miss Hyatt, a rising young pianist of Chicago, and a number of local musicians. Miss Frost has a large circle of acquaintances in Colorado Springs who will be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of hearing her.

Ex-Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, Mrs. Saunders and their daughter Mrs. Harrison arrived in the city on Tuesday evening, and will spend the summer here. Mrs. Harrison is a daughter-in-law of General Benjamin Harrison, the republican candidate for president.

The president of the Young Men's Republican club has appointed the following committee to organize a uniformed Harrison and Morton Campaign club: G. R. Fowler, H. S. Woodruff, J. H. Barlow, Wm. Saxton and E. G. Perkins.

Mr. John Hay and wife, of Washington, were among Wednesday's arrivals at The Antlers. Mr. Hay enjoys a national reputation from his connection with the monthly biographical sketches of Mr. Lincoln now being published in The Century.

Mr. J. H. Bowman has obtained the necessary lighting facilities for the bands stands in the parks, and will at once collect a fund to pay the band for two weekly open air concerts during the summer. He expects to experience little difficulty in raising the required sum.

Streeter & Bradbury have nearly completed their grading contract on the Rock Island east of this city and in the vicinity of Granger. Sub-contractors are now at work on the last two miles.

Dr. O. M. White, a dentist of several years' experience, has opened an office opposite the postoffice. He makes a specialty of the filling and treatment of diseased teeth.

A congregation of the United Presbyterian church has been organized in this city.

Mr. N. Hodgman, formerly of this city, has located permanently with his family at Salt Lake City.

The contract for the new Congregational church building was signed Tuesday.

Mr. William Ray and wife have returned from an extended visit to New Mexico.

Mrs. Francis W. Goddard, president of the Bellevue society, has called a meeting of all persons interested in benevolent works in our city, to be held in the Baptist church on Tuesday next, July 17, at 4 o'clock p. m. This meeting will be addressed by several of the city pastors. The objects of the organization will be explained. Reports of the work thus far accomplished will be presented and plans for its further prosecution submitted. To make the Bellevue sanitarium the successful institution and power for good in our midst, which it should be, will require the active and sympathetic aid and co-operation of the entire community. A most encouraging beginning has been made, and now if the benevolent people of the city will but co-operate, the early establishment of the sanitarium is assured. The meeting of next Tuesday is not called for the purpose of soliciting pecuniary aid from those who may be present, but rather to submit reports of what has already been done and take counsel for the future, and above all to awaken the interest and sympathy of all the people in this the most important benevolent enterprise ever undertaken in Colorado Springs. A large and representative attendance of the community at the meeting is therefore respectfully urged.

The card of the First National Bank shows several important changes. The most important one is that the capital stock is reduced from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars. None of the stockholders have gone out of the bank, but new capital has been taken in. The new directors are Charles Tauchnow, A. A. McGovney and E. J. Eaton, all of whom have solid standing in this community, and will add to the strength of the bank. There is no change in the officers, except the new office of assistant cashier is created, which is filled by Mr. Charles A. Noble. The statement of the bank published elsewhere shows it to be in a good condition. It has a surplus of forty thousand dollars and nine thousand five hundred and seventy-two dollars and three cents of undivided profits.

A colored man by the name of Matt Slaughter was arrested Thursday afternoon by Officer Shelby on a warrant sworn out by his wife, charging him with forgery. Mrs. Slaughter had some money deposited in one of the banks and a few days ago she earned that her husband had forged her name to a number of checks and had obtained the money in the banks.

The committee of arrangements of the excursion to Manitou from this city and Manitou to Leadville on Wednesday next have secured permission for the party to visit the Silver Cord and Minnie mines. The Minnie mine has $12,000,000 of money in sight, and it will be well worth the cost of the trip to see it.

The county commissioners, at their meeting Thursday, finished the examination of the tax schedules and organized a new voting precinct west and north west of Summit Park, to be known as Cave Rock precinct.

Mr. Frank Finnegan has secured the contract for doing the stone work on the new Congregational church. The contract calls for the completion of the building by April 1st.

One of the contractors on the Rock Island road in this city stated a few days ago that trains would be running to Colorado Springs within eighty days.

The Teveni and Germania clubs have subscribed for a number of leading democratic newspapers which will be kept on file in the club rooms over Bernard Bros.' grocery store.

The funeral of the late Rev. W. W. Forbes, of the Sanborn Missions, will take place in the Presbyterian church on Sunday afternoon at half past one o'clock.

Ranchmen who reside in the eastern portion of the county report the grass on the range as being fairly burned up for the want of rain.

At the rate at which work is progressing on the building the new Exchange National Bank will be ready to open for business by August 1st.

The Denver and Rio Grande railroad is now selling commutation tickets to Manitou. Twenty tickets for $2.50.

Sheriff Jackson has gone to Aspen on official business.

COLORADO CITY ITEMS.

Mr. C. E. Dodson, of the Eagle, who has been quite sick, is now considerably improved.

The Odd Fellows yesterday moved their lodge furniture and effects into their new hall in the Templeton building.

Mr. A. Bisteau, an employe of Horace Quinby, the everyman, met with a very painful accident yesterday morning. He was attending a horse when the animal suddenly kicked and kicked him in the stomach, then crowded him against the wall of his stall and bore him to the floor. Bisteau managed to extricate himself and walked from the stable without aid. He seemed dazed, however, and after he had proceeded a short distance from the stable received medical attention. Drs. Bisbee and Ammerman and a physician from Colorado Springs were summoned and it took them three hours to restore the injured man to consciousness. It was at first believed that he was severely injured internally, but later accounts he was resting easily, and it is hoped no serious results will ensue.

Work has begun on the Grand Valley ditch, which it is expected will irrigate about 225,000 acres in Garfield county.

A SWISS SCHUETZENFEST.

Our Correspondent Visits a Prize Target Shooting.

(Special Correspondence.)

INTERLAKEN, Switzerland, June 12.—There is perhaps no people, if we except the Tyrolese, so passionately fond of the practice of target shooting as the sturdy, enterprising and liberty loving Swiss nation. The best proof for this assertion is found in the numerous schuetzenfests that annually occur in various parts of this model European republic. Of these there are chiefly two kinds—national schuetzenfests and cantonal target shootings. (The name of the latter is derived from the word canton, which is the official term for the individual states or districts composing Switzerland.)

A schuetzenfest is a very interesting sight and presents to those who have never witnessed one many new and striking features. It is an occasion of much importance for those people, and ranks with them as high as in America the national game of baseball, though there is this radical difference between the two—that in the former the victors are not crews but individuals. It is, therefore, not so complicated and prone to provoke dissension and animosity as is often the case with baseball. Another important difference lies in the fact that there are no salaried professionals, but every man acts purely as an individual, yet, if he achieves victory, the credit of it is also reflected upon the community or district to which he belongs. Great is the pride of the particular canton, city or village which counts among its denizens a schuetzenkoenig of the year—that is, the man who on such a target shooting has excelled all his competitors.

There is not a village of any size that does not have a target shooting club, which often numbers its members by the hundreds, many of them, old gray haired men, but with eye undimmed and their love for the sport not in the least abated. They usually have uniforms in which green plays an important part. Their rifles, of course, vary in style and quality, according to the circumstances of the owner, but it frequently happens that the schuetzenkoenig proves to be the proprietor of a shabby, old fashioned shooting iron, which, however, in his steady hands and with his eagle eye, has distanced all the more stylish and pretentious looking rifles of his fellow contestants.

There are always prizes put up for the successful shooters. These prizes consist sometimes of medals, silver cups or similar articles, but most of money often in very considerable amounts, so that besides the desire for fame and distinction, the prospect of a handsome purse of money acts as a powerful stimulus on the contestants to do their best. When I last visited one of the schuetzenfests, at which the chief prize was 500 francs ($100), I particularly noticed an old man who had done remarkably well, in fact so well that the final contest for the first prize had narrowed down to three competitors, of which he was one. Each was to have three more shots. Carefully and deliberately he selected three cartridges for his repeating rifle and then coolly and without the slightest agitation he fired his three shots in succession. The result was very gratifying, but he had no mean rivals, and everybody waited almost with bated breath until the matter was decided. The man that followed him came within three points of him, out of a hundred, but a miss was as good as a mile. Then came the other. His first shot was a bull's eye. That looked bad for the old man, and I turned to look at him. His face showed no trace of emotion, so I knew there were two shots yet to be fired, which might not turn out as well as the first. The report of the second shot rang out upon the air and a bull's eye was scored. Still the old man's face showed as imperturbable as ever. Then the last shot—a pretty good one, but the three reckoned together just amounted to one point less than the old man's score. The latter was schuetzenkoenig for another year, so having held that dignity, as I afterwards learned, for five consecutive years. You should have heard the cheering that ensued, as the result was made known to the large assemblage. Everybody crowded around and congratulated him, for he seemed to be a great favorite. He took it very quietly and modestly, yet you could see that he was gratified.

Then ensued a period of great hilarity. The large garden restaurants of the town were filled to overflowing and the numerous pretty kellnerinnen (waiter girls) were kept more than busy in providing the guests with wine and beer and other things. It was not long until from every direction you could hear the sounds of instrumental music or patriotic songs by improvised choirs. It seemed as though a spirit of merriment had seized the whole town, which in a general way was also a fact. Yet amidst all this turmoil of merrymaking a regard for decency and the rights of others was everywhere observed. It showed the people understood the difficult art of enjoying themselves with proper moderation. This was my experience at a Swiss schuetzenfest.

ONE OF EL PASO'S INDUSTRIES.

The Sixth District Cattle Growers' Association.

HEADQUARTERS,
COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.,

President—W. M. Stricker.

Vice President—Chauncey Callaway.

Secretary and Treasurer—C. A. Lansing.

Executive Committee—Bernard Gilpin, F. A. Waters, F. E. Baxter.

Round-Up Commissioners—Bernard Gilpin, C. A. Lansing, C. E. Lowe.

Foreman of the Round-up—J. J. Dubanks.

THE ASSOCIATION.

Although the association is yet in its infancy, it has already a good-sized membership and has accomplished some good work. It has for its object the protection of its members and the cattle interests of the Sixth District. Moving herds are inspected thoroughly and the quarantine laws rigorously enforced. A standing reward of $100 is offered for the detection, prosecution and conviction of cattle thieves. The members fees of the association are only $5.50 per year, which amount entitles the members to all the protection that the association affords. Brand books are also issued which are of inestimable value to cattle owners. Those desiring to become members should send in their names to the secretary at Colorado Springs. The officers are all active cattle men and will do all in their power to further the interests of the association and its members.

Public notice is hereby given, that the county commissioners of El Paso county, Colorado, will sit as a board of equalization for the correction and completion of the assessment roll of said county, on Monday, the second day of July, A. D., 1888, and continue in session as said board of equalization for the purpose of supplying omissions in said assessment roll, and equalizing the same, not less than three nor more than ten consecutive days, and for the purpose of equalizing said assessment roll they are empowered by law to increase, diminish, alter or correct any assessment or valuation.

That on Monday, the sixteenth day of July, A. D., 1888, the said county commissioners will hold their second meeting as such board of equalization, continuing in session not less than two nor more than ten consecutive days, for the purpose of hearing complaints, only from those dissatisfied with the changes made in their assessments at the first meeting of said board, or otherwise, and to adjust said assessment roll as in their judgment is just and proper. Tax payers are notified that they must attend to their assessments at said second meeting.

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

Whereas, Sophie Herrman, of the county of El Paso and state of Colorado, did on the first day of March, A. D., 1888, by her certain deed of trust of that date, duly recorded in the office of the county clerk and recorder of El Paso county, state of Colorado, on the 13th day of March, A. D., 1888, in book ninety-six (96), at page 395, convey to the undersigned as trustee, or in case of his failure for any reason to act as such trustee, then to the then sheriff of said El Paso county, Colorado, as successor in trust, the following described real estate situate in the county of El Paso and state of Colorado, to-wit: Lots number three (3) and number four (4) in block two hundred and fifty-three (253), in Bott's Second addition to the town of Colorado City, county of El Paso and state of Colorado, which conveyance was made in trust to secure the payment to E. C. D. Zook, of the promissory notes of the said Sophie Herrman of even date therewith for the principal sum of five hundred and thirty dollars ($530) with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of ten per cent per annum, payable quarterly; and

Whereas, the said deed of trust provides that in case of default in the payment of said promissory notes according to the tenor and effect thereof, or any part thereof, or any interest thereon, then in that case the said trustee, or in case of his failure for any reason to act, then the said successor in trust, shall sell said real estate for the purpose of paying the principal of said notes and the interest thereon, and all expenses connected with the execution of said trust, and

Whereas, the time of payment of said notes has passed, and default has been made in the payment both of principal and interest thereon. Now, therefore, at the request of the legal holder of said notes, and in and by virtue of the authority in me vested by the terms of said deed of trust, I, the undersigned, trustee as aforesaid, or in case of my failure for any reason to act, then the undersigned Leonard Jackson, sheriff of El Paso county, Colorado, successor in trust, will on the 6th day of August, 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the front door of the county court house in the county of El Paso in the state of Colorado, sell the above described property at public auction to the highest bidder for cash in hand for the purpose of paying said promissory notes and interest thereon, together with the costs and expenses of executing this trust.

A. A. McGOVNEY, Trustee.
LEONARD JACKSON, Sheriff of El Paso County, Colorado, Successor in Trust.
